Fears that Dale Farm travellers may set up camp here

Exclusive by Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

MORE than 400 travellers embroiled in a bitter dispute over the controversial Dale Farm encampment could be forced to move to Kent.

Basildon Council in Essex has been trying for a decade to remove an entire community from the UK's largest illegal travellers' site, and this week returned to the High Court to contest the residents' claims an eviction would constitute a breach of their human rights.

Concerns have now been raised that should the travellers lose their legal battle, they will simply take the short journey over the River Thames to find a new home in Kent.

"There's every possibility they could come to Kent," said Joe Jones, director of the Canterbury Gypsy Support Group and chairman of the international Gypsy Council. "It's only a short hop over the bridge after all, unless the police decide to blockade everywhere like they've already done in Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire. Who knows what's going to happen? They might even park up on the M25 and block that off."

"Obviously the occupants of Dale Farm have got to go. What we're saying to the council is let them stay there until they've got the planning applications passed to go elsewhere."

"As usual there has been a total failure by local councils to provide permanent accommodation for gypsies and travellers."

Last year a letter signed by all 13 of Kent's district and borough heads – including Kent County Council leader Cllr Paul Carter – was sent to the Government, calling for tougher penalties for people who build without planning permission. The document made a particular point about caravans and mobile homes, stating that current policy "weighs against what is acceptable and explainable".

DALE FARM

Calls for new rules governing traveller sites

This week Cllr Carter agreed that the Dale Farm travellers could soon end up in Kent.

"At the moment there seem to be two different sets of planning rules – one for the gypsies and one for Joe Public," he said.

"Nobody knows where they will go and it's a concern because we are struggling to cope with the number of gypsies in the county already.

"No council has identified as many permanent sites as planning laws say we should because, quite reasonably, there is always enormous public opposition with any location.

"And if we asked the travellers themselves how many pitches they require, the number would be three or four times greater to accommodate all their family members.

"We need new rules setting out an intelligent and appropriate number of sites."

The planned clearance of the six-acre Dale Farm site was halted last week when lawyers for the travellers obtained a High Court injunction preventing bailiffs moving in.

They argued that eviction would have grave consequences for children living on the site and their schooling, and those with medical conditions.

"I don't even want to contemplate them coming to Kent," said Cllr Andrew Bowles, a member of Kent's gypsy and traveller advisory board and leader of Swale council.

"It would be deeply unpopular among the indigenous population, especially among those who pay council tax.

"We've been working on how to provide land for travellers for years, but at the end of the day this is a democracy and you can't impose sites on people.

"We don't have a queue of communities willing to take on gypsy encampments."

UNWELCOME: Communities are reluctant to welcome traveller sites, say politicians

EDUCATION

Schools tzar says seaside schools face biggest challenges to success

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

EDUCATION chiefs say they are working hard to tackle the challenges faced by coastal schools following stinging remarks by the schools' commissioner who accused seaside communities of a "lack of energy".

Liz Sidwell, a respected former headteacher recruited by education secretary Michael Gove to improve schools, accused coastal towns of having low aspirations. She said seaside areas posed the biggest concern under the reforms, where she said white working classes were "the most challenging culture".

Department for Education figures showed white children from low-income families performed the worst in GCSEs last summer.

Kent County Council cabinet member for education, learning and skills Cllr Mike Whiting said although Ms Sidwell was right to acknowledge the challenges in some of the schools, it should not distract from the hard work carried out to enhance the lives of young people.

"Some children who come to coastal areas may arrive with attainment lev-

NO ENERGY: A 'lack of energy' has been blamed for poor performance in some schools in the county's coastal areas els below the national average for their age," he said. "Reasons for this can vary enormously, from children having particular emotional or behavioural needs, to social circumstances or not having English as their first language.

"Headteachers and others recognise the challenges and work with partners to support families with low aspirations.

"Teachers have to be on top of their game to change hearts and minds and provide the opportunity for young people to catch up with their peers."

He also stressed that many coastal town schools were celebrating significantly improved or high GCSE results.

Gravesend-based education expert Peter Read, who experienced working in a school in an east Kent seaside town, said it was a fact that coastal schools had their work cut out.

"Everyone knows headteachers in these areas have to work harder. If they don't deliver, the schools go under very quickly," he said. "Walmer Science College, near Deal, has gone into special measures because of poor leadership, whereas King Ethelbert near Margate is under good leadership and doing well.

"Leadership is always going to be key. There is no doubt the south and east Kent coastal communities are deprived and have been since the heyday of the English holiday resort, and therefore aspirations may well be low."

Education commissioner Ms Sidwell said areas with a "mono-culture", such as seaside towns, had communities with less aspiration to work or go to the city or abroad, and that this had to be turned around to ensure schools changed.

But Conservative MP for Thanet North, Roger Gale, who represents the coastal towns of Margate and Herne Bay, did not accept her comments.

"Ms Sidwell is entitled to her view and there may be coastal areas where there is a problem, but if she went to Herne Bay High, Ursuline in Westgate, Hartsdown in Margate I don't think she'd find a lack of energy. She'd find a lack of investment, like at Hartsdown, which missed out on Building Schools for the Future funding. It is discouraging when a school is falling down and needs to be rebuilt.

"There may well be problems in other coastal areas, but we're very lucky in my constituency.

"What is important is quality of teaching and dedication of staff, in particular the headteacher. I can't underestimate the importance of headteachers."

Labour spokesman for Kent, Paul Clark, former MP for Gillingham and Rainham, said he feared aspirations would be knocked if youngsters were unable to find work or gain skills.

He added: "Michael Gove's drive to go back to traditional schooling is focusing on the most academically gifted and is going to undermine the opportunities of those young people with skills and aspirations but not academic ability."

Prince Charming is ready to Stand and Deliver all the hits

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

IT is a statistic which will make those of a certain age cringe, but Adam Ant's career now spans a remarkable five decades.

From the excitement and fury of the punk explosion in the 70s, to the pomp and splendour of his 80s heyday, he is a music icon; his fashion choices as era defining as his string of hits.

After recent years where his mental health – he suffers from bipolar disorder – has made more headlines than his legacy, he is back on stage and playing to sell-out audiences.

And for the first time in his long career, he is coming to Kent to perform many of his hits such as Prince Charming, Stand and Deliver, Puss N Boots, and Goody Two Shoes.

His show at Tunbridge Wells' Assembly Hall Theatre in December will see his six-piece band playing hits, rarities from the earliest days of Adam and the Ants, and songs from his upcoming album – Adam Ant is the Blueblack Hussar in Marrying the Gunner's Daughter.

And at 56, he is returning to a county full of childhood memories.

"I used to spend my holidays in Birchington when I was a little kid," he explains.

"I used to go there between the ages of seven and 10. My dad was a chauffeur and his boss used to have a house on the coast – which is still there. I used to go down there, play on the beach, and muck about.

"My daughter's grandparents live in Kent so I've been down there a few times. Dover Castle's a knockout. It was great – I've had a really good time down there."

And he is promising a good night out: "I try and give a good night's entertainment, keep it simple, that's all I can do. We do all the hits, because that's what people want.

"I don't do medleys, and there's not a big stage show. There's just me and the six-piece band.

"The process is to get out there and give people what they want and what we want. The equation is quite simple. If we enjoy it, then it tends to be the case the audience enjoys it."

The new album is due for a release on Ant's own label later this year, just don't expect to find it on iTunes.

He explained: "It's a double-vinyl album; traditional beautiful cover, sleeve notes, lots to read while you're listening, a CD and a box set. I'm going old school and I'm not doing downloads.

"I'm making a point. I'm a songwriter. And everyone knows that music which gets downloaded for free means the songwriter doesn't get paid. And that's not right. It's robbery."

Not that his legacy doesn't reap rewards. "I wrote the songs so they make money," he says. "I got Goody Two Shoes into Shrek 3 and that pays the rent for a year. Robbie Williams did a cover version of Ant Music, and that's the rent for another year."

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Gold rip-off warning

PEOPLE selling second-hand gold are being ripped off, says Medway Trading Standards.

An investigation found that 40 per cent of jewellers, pawn brokers and secondhand shops, checked in Medway had inaccurate or unapproved scales, and the prices being paid showed big variations.

The lowest price offered for the 14 grams of scrap gold was £95 while the highest price offered was £130.

➔ Teen admits killing

A TEENAGER has admitted manslaughter.

Charlie McBride, 19, of Brighton Road, Sutton, Surrey appeared at Maidstone Crown Court where he admitted killing 25-year-old Richard Collier, whose father John is a Shepway Conservative councillor.

Mr Collier, of Wellington Crescent, Ramsgate, died from a head injury caused by McBride during an assault in Marine Gardens, Margate, at around 2am on Saturday, June 25.

➔ Hospital merger fears

PROPOSALS to integrate Medway Maritime and Darent Valley hospitals are being considered by both NHS hospital trusts. Patient watchdog Kent LINK says it has assurances accident and emergency, and maternity services, will be retained on both hospital sites, but wants promises a full range of services will be protected on both sites. It is holding a public meeting on October 19 at 5.30pm at Fleet Leisure Centre, Nelson Road, Northfleet.

WILDLIFE

Decline of wild birds reflects drop in our own quality of life

THE numbers of farmland and woodland birds in the county have declined dramatically.

Birds of most concern include farmland birds such as the corn bunting and lapwing, and woodland species such as the hawfinch, the lesser spotted woodpecker, marsh tit, and willow tit – which has virtually disappeared from the county.

The survey carried out by the RSPB and the British Trust for Ornithology, shows how populations of birds using woodland, farmland and other habitats has changed across the South East since 1994.

Farmland birds have declined by 28 per cent, while woodland birds have fallen by 19 per cent. Overall bird numbers are down by 12 per cent.

RSPB South East conservation programme manager Steve Gilbert said: "It's worrying that we've lost more than a quarter of our farmland birds

ALMOST DISAPPEARED:

The willow tit is an increasingly rare sight in our countryside and a fifth of our woodland birds in this region.

"There are a variety of factors that could be causing this, including lack of woodland management, woodlands drying out, which may be linked to climate change, as well as high human population density and intense use of land and water resources."

Last winter's severe weather hit birds particularly hard. The ending of the set-aside scheme in 2007, where farmers left areas of their land uncultivated in return for EU grants, could also be a factor in the decline of farmland birds.

Mr Gilbert said: "What these trends tell us is that it's vital the Government addresses the serious issues of planning reform and climate change, and helps farmers make their land more wildlife friendly through effective, targeted agri-environment schemes."

Martin Harper, RSPB conservation director, said: "What is shocking is when you look beyond the graphs, you realise these figures are about the lives of birds and the figures chart the ability of birds to survive in our countryside; the place where we go for walks and grow our food.

"If some of these birds are struggling to survive that may say a lot about the quality of our own countryside and our own quality of life."

The queen of shops has her sights set on our high street

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

QUEEN of shops Mary Portas has paid a visit to Margate as part of a research mission to help stop the decline of the dwindling high street.

The town is one of only a handful of areas featuring in the national review, which has been commissioned by David Cameron and Nick Clegg.

Television presenter and retail guru Ms Portas told KoS that in Margate – where 36 per cent of shops were empty in the first half of 2011 – there are two clear parts to the high street.

"There's the fantastic, bustling Old Town and then you get to the other end and it's a very bleak picture," she said.

Asked whether it would ever return to its former glory when up against competition such as out-of-town shopping outlets like Westwood Cross, she said high streets in general would not be the same as before.

"I don't have the answer yet; part of my research is listening to retailers and understanding what could be a solution.

"This review is vitally important. If we don't look at regenerating our town centres there will be problems."

Ms Portas, star of BBC Two's Mary Queen of Shops and Channel 4's Mary Portas: Secret Shopper, said it was important for society that high streets were regenerated.

"With town centre vacancy rates doubling over the last two years, the need to take action to save high streets has never been starker," she said. "I am encouraging everyone who cares about the future of the high street to have their say."

"Margate is a town that has had it tougher than any other high street in the country but it is also a great example of one that is fighting back and I want to draw on this spirit and the creativity of those involved."

The review is being carried out for the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills to identify what government, local authorities and businesses can do to promote the development of more prosperous and diverse high streets.

Leader of Thanet District Council, Cllr Bob Bayford, said he was delighted Margate was forming part of the review.

"Nationally the face of retail is changing and we need to do everything we can to address that," he said. "Here in Margate we have an interesting story. At a time when shop vacancy rates are increasing we've seen Margate Old Town flourish with over 35 new businesses, all unique, setting up in the last 18 months.

"Much of that is down to the Turner effect and it's something we're keen to encourage, as boutique shopping gives visitors one more reason to come to the town. We don't want to just be another clone.

"We've been talking to Mary about how more can be done to encourage independent retailers and what support we feel Margate needs."

Business minister Edward Davey stressed that the high street should be at the heart of every community, "bringing people together, providing essential services and creating jobs and investment".

"Mary's review will look into many important areas including how we can adopt new business models for the high street to fit the needs of the modern shopper and how we increase the number of small and independent retailers doing business in town centres."

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Rare bug discovered

A rare insect never seen before in Britain has been found at a nature park in Kent.

The horehound shieldbug was discovered by photographer Jason Elmore at Kent Wildlife Trust's park at Tyland Barn in Sandling near Maidstone, where at least 50 more specimens have since been found. Expert Dr Tristan Bantock said: "The horehound shieldbug is one of many species of insects which have recently arrived in Britain as a result of climatic warming."

➔ Cricketers' patrol boost

REGULAR security patrols are helping protect Ashford Town Cricket Club after it left counting the cost of £10,000 of theft and vandalism.

The club had pipework and other fittings stolen in a raid officials say cost them thousands.

It prompted cricket fan John Howland, managing director of Ashford-based Swift Security, to include the club's ground at Steeds Lane, Kingsnorth, on his company's regular rural patrols – free of charge.

➔ Teen on murder charge

CALEB White, 19, from Cornwall Close, Maidstone, has been charged with the murder of 21-year-old Tom Crittenden.

Police and paramedics were called to Sutton Road, Maidstone, at around 2.15am on Sunday, September 25.

Mr Crittenden died at the scene. A post mortem examination found the cause of his death to be a single stab wound.

Southeastern stockpiles 4,000 glow sticks to tackle winter power cuts

GLOW sticks will be handed out to rail passengers during lengthy delays caused by snow.

Some 4,000 will be stored on Southeastern trains this winter to enable people to see in the dark if the power goes out.

The plan is one of several to be implemented by the operator in partnership with Network Rail, to ensure minimal disruption to passengers in the event of another bout of severe snow.

In addition, a further 40,000 metres of conductor rail heating has been installed on the Southeastern network, and there are now eight anti-icing trains compared to six last year.

A further 20 passenger trains have also been fitted with anti-icing tanks, and three new four-wheel drive vehicles have been bought to help engineers reach stranded trains more quickly.

Southeastern managing director Charles Horton said: "Heavy snow and ice represents a significant challenge for running trains on the third rail network. While there is always likely to be disruption during severe weather, we believe the work we have been doing with Network Rail should enable us to keep more services operating, help us recover more quickly from disruption, and support efforts to improve the quality of information we provide to passengers."

Southeastern and Network Rail have also purchased 100 extra salt bins, 220 hand-pushed snow ploughs and 16 motorised ploughs, as well as 4,000 foil blankets for stranded passengers.

The plans were unveiled at a meeting in Westminster organised by Maidstone and the Weald Tory MP Helen Grant.

She said: "Together Network Rail and Southeastern have clearly worked hard to try to avoid a repetition of the shambles we all endured last winter. I really hope we don't get the weather we had last year, but if we do it appears there has been much better preparation."

From 3 January 2012, the current emissions standards are changing and more vehicle types will be affected

Curtain rises at city's new Marlowe Theatre

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

A NEW cultural landmark was unveiled in Canterbury this week when the £25.6 million Marlowe Theatre opened its doors to the world's press.

It is hoped the building will make the city a new cultural Mecca, drawing audiences not just from the county but from as far afield as London.

Janice McGuinness, head of culture and enterprise at Canterbury City Council said: "We are delighted to be opening one of the largest cultural projects in the country. This is a third millennium theatre for a first millennium city."

The new Marlowe has an increased capacity of 1,200 seats alongside a flexible studio seating around 150 people for smaller performances.

The theatre has been designed by Keith Williams, who praised backers for deciding to have a vision of a modern design for Canterbury.

He said: "The Marlowe Theatre is that very rare thing – a major new contemporary theatre building within a magnificent historic cathedral city."

"Its architecture is radical yet it has been conceived to fit comfortably within its historic surroundings and I am confident that it will have a transformative effect on arts and culture in the South East and beyond."

The large theatre dominates the quaint streets of the city around it.

The improved facilities mean it can now attract larger productions, collaborating with companies such as the Philharmonia Orchestra and Glyndebourne Opera.

James Williams from the Philharmonia Orchestra said: "To have a new venue like this which is built with the audience and performer perspective in mind is wonderful. These opportunities come along very rarely. It's great that at a time of austerity Canterbury is investing in culture."

The new theatre can cater for than more than 80 musicians in its orchestra pit. The Philharmonia will be performing at the theatre's opening gala on Tuesday and Glyndebourne will perform regularly.

Around 140 people are employed at the new theatre.

PUBLIC SERVICES

Increased social care costs will 'worsen mental health'

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

COUNTY Hall has come under attack after controversial plans to raise the cost of providing adult social care in Kent were given the green light.

From next April Kent County Council will increase the amount of available income taken into account when working out how much to charge a person, and will ask mental health patients to contribute for the first time.

Adult social care services include day care centres, help with cleaning and shopping, equipment for the home, and a wide range of other services. Transport will also be included in the services that can be charged for, in an attempt to save about £2.9 million a year.

Cabinet member for adult social care, Cllr Graham Gibbens, approved the proposals last week despite receiving thousands of objections during the 16-week public consultation.

He had previously received criticism for doing the same

CHARGES: Concerns have been raised the new payment system will isolate more adults over the closure of several care homes for the elderly.

Peter Webber – chief executive of North West Kent Carers Support Services – said the increased charges would hit society's most vulnerable.

In regards to charging people with mental health problems, he said: "People do not to recognise they need support. Can you imagine how much more difficult it will be if the person is then charged for the services they are reluctant to accept?"

"This may lead to worsening mental health, resulting in a hospital admission or worse."

Mr Webber added that other social care recipients may stop attending day care centres as a result of the changes, leading to greater social exclusion.

Plans to increase the cost of adult social care were agreed as part of the KCC budget earlier this year, but the finer details have only just been finalised.

The authority says those eligible to pay for their care will be individually assessed. How much they pay will vary but the council will increase the amount of available income taken into account from 85 to 100 per cent.

Cllr Gibbens said: "I know many people will be concerned about this decision. However, there is a lot of flexibility in the way it will be put in place and no-one will be asked to pay more than an assessment shows they can afford."

"By keeping eligibility criteria at moderate and making these changes, we can keep our commitment to help people maintain their independence and make their own choices."

CONFERENCE

Meet 16-year-old Rory, your future MP

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

A TEENAGE politician who brought the house down at this week's Labour Party conference is refusing to get carried away with his new-found fame.

Rory Weal, 16, from Maidstone, received a standing ovation from the thousands in attendance after delivering a powerful speech in which he slammed the Coalition for trebling university

THE YOUTH VOTE: Maidstone schoolboy Rory Weal is watched by shadow chancellor Ed Ball and party leader Ed Miliband at the party's conference tuition fees and scrapping the Future Jobs Fund and Education Maintenance Allowance.

The show-stealing performance, which was replayed countless times on television on Monday, came just weeks after the Oakwood Park Grammar School student was tipped for the top in an Observer article entitled 'Spot the next Prime Minister'.

But despite finding himself thrust into the national spotlight, Rory told KoS he was keeping his feet firmly on the ground.

When asked if he saw himself as a future MP, Rory said: "I wouldn't rule anything out but I'd like to get my A-levels out of the way before I start thinking about that sort of thing."

"It was really nice to get such a response at the conference but the main thing was to get these issues on the agenda. Anything that can flag them up is a good thing.

"Before I was picked to speak I went through the sort of thing I wanted to say, but I ended up adding extra bits as I got angrier about the situation. It was a bit nerve-racking to begin with but I felt fine once I got up there. I was just pleased I didn't trip over to be honest."

While Labour leader Ed Miliband and shadow chancellor Ed Balls were the highest-profile speakers of the conference in Liverpool, it was Rory who grabbed the attention of the masses.

Accusing the Government of taking "a bit of a dislike" to young people, the youth delegate for Maidstone and the Weald drew comparisons with current Foreign Secretary William Hague when, as a teenager, he delivered a similarly powerful speech at the 1977 Conservative party conference.

Rory told his fellow Labour supporters: "Two-and-a-half years ago, the home I had lived in since birth was repossessed. We had nothing—no money, no savings. I owe my entire well being and that of my family's to the welfare state; that very same welfare state that is being ruthlessly ripped apart by this Tory-led Government."

Afterwards Rory told KoS he was pleased to be able to provide a voice for young people.

He added: "Too often our views are not heard, partly because most of us are not old enough to vote, but also because a lot of young people feel intimidated by the whole political structure."

"Politics needs to be made more accessible to people of my age group, and lowering the voting age to 16 would be a step in the right direction."

HEALTH

'Dereliction of duty' over doctors' flu jabs is a just a counting error, say NHS chiefs

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

HEALTH chiefs have dismissed claims just 2.1 per cent of doctors in east Kent received the winter flu jab last year.

Following the release of figures for every NHS trust in the country, Dr Lindsey Davies – president of the UK Faculty of Public Health – said staff who did not get vaccinated against the bug were guilty of “complete dereliction of duty” and could endanger the lives of at-risk patients including babies, pregnant woman and the elderly.

But NHS Eastern and Coastal Kent says it believes a data collection error is to blame for the low take-up numbers, which are among the lowest in the UK and also significantly worse than neighbouring primary care trusts NHS Medway (34.4 per cent) and NHS West Kent (25.3 per cent).

Dr Davies told the national press: “If a vulnerable patient gets the flu, they could die – it's as simple as that.”

“That's a danger at the moment. The patient isn't well to start with, so if a doctor infects their patient – especially if they are chronically unwell, very elderly, pregnant, have a breathing condition or are a young baby – then that patient could die.”

“It's a complete dereliction of duty for any health professional not to have the flu vaccine because as well as having a duty to treat patients, they also have a duty to keep them from harm. They are also at risk of being absent from work, completely avoidably.”

DANGER: Flu carrying doctors put vulnerable patients at risk

According to the NHS figures, just 34.7 per cent of healthcare workers nationally received the jab last year, even though the potentially fatal swine flu was the predominant strain over the winter months.

Health trade unions and the Department of Health are now backing a campaign to tackle low immunisation rates among frontline staff, which Kent's PCTs are also supporting.

Dr Declan O'Neill, director of health improvement for the county, said: “We have looked at the information indicating that only 2.1 per cent of doctors in Eastern and Coastal Kent were vaccinated against flu last winter. We believe it is probably due to a local data collection fault rather than the actual picture of immunised doctors.

“We believe we have discovered the source of the fault and are taking steps to correct it. Based on the experience of previous years, we would not have expected the picture to be that different from the other parts of Kent and Medway.

“However, we would like to see a much higher uptake of immunisation across the county. We urge all frontline NHS and social care staff to be vaccinated against flu. It protects them and reduces the possibility of them passing the virus to patients.

“Public Health is working with all the organisations which provide healthcare in Kent, including hospital trusts and GP practices, to improve immunisation rates this year.”

Cardboard box firm fined over worker's fall

CARDBOARD box company WE Roberts (Corrugated) Ltd in Northfleet has been fined more than £20,000 after a worker fell and suffered severe head injuries. The incident took place on August 27, 2009, when the worker was trying to pull a pallet of boxes across his trailer, the pallet strapping snapped, and he fell onto the pavement. The firm admitted breaching the Health and Safety at Work Act.

DEATH

Police probe as man's body found at seafront

THE body of a man was found on Margate seafront. It was first seen in the sea on Wednesday evening close to the harbour area.

Police are treating the death as unexplained.

A spokesman said: “Kent Police were called at 6.23pm to the seafront at the harbour area. Officers will now be carrying out a full investigation to identify the man and the circumstances surrounding his death.”

Dry homes feel warmer

Holland Damp Proofing dries out your home and is guaranteed to work

Your damp proofing questions answered

Holland Damp Proofing managing director Evert De Graaf answers your questions about damp and his unique system to treat it.

What does damp look and feel like?

The tell-tale signs of damp are fungus and mould growth on walls, peeling wallpaper and rotting carpets and woodwork. The wet weather and low temperatures will add to this, leaving your property feeling colder and probably costing you more to run. Addressing your damp problems now will lead to drier walls, which in turn should help lower your energy bills.

How does your system work?

The system involves a series of small damp-regulating bricks which fit into specially prepared niches in the external walls of your home, close to the ground, at regular intervals. These bricks are installed from the outside by our trained engineers. Once in place, they allow air to flow into the brick chambers and out again – circulating airflow through the inside of the wall which evaporates the moisture, drying out the wall and allowing it to breathe.

What properties is it suitable for?

Virtually all types – it is suitable for use on cavity, solid, and brick walls. It is particularly good for stone walls. It can also be used on most properties of any shape and size, from mansions to maisonettes – we've even installed our system in a windmill!

Is it a big job to have it installed?

No, because we work from the outside, the inside of your house won't be turned into a building site and with our trained engineers doing the installation, it usually only takes one to two days.

Why do you say it is eco-friendly?

It uses airflow to dry out walls rather than toxic chemicals, which are used in 'traditional' damp proofing systems. It is also a permanent solution, guaranteed for 20 years, so it won't need replacing.

What are the advantages of using this system over more traditional chemical damp proofing?

Chemical damp proof courses are installed inside the home so there is a lot of mess and disruption, not to mention the additional cost of redecorating, which - if you have damp in a kitchen or bathroom - can be particularly expensive.

Conservationists' final push against planning reforms

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

THE National Trust has issued a last-ditch plea for people to support its campaign against the Government's controversial planning reforms.

Led by Tunbridge Wells MP Greg Clark, the proposed National Planning Policy Framework streamlines more than 1,000 pages of existing rules down to just 52 and contains a presumption in favour of "sustainable development".

The plans also state that only councils with agreed local development plans – less than half of UK town hall have one – will be able to refuse development on greenfield sites.

Mr Clark – Conservative minister for cities – says the reforms are needed to boost growth and provide more homes, but an alliance of conservation charities are concerned about the impact of the changes on open spaces and countryside.

"If adopted, this policy will pave the way for countless damaging development schemes in our countryside," said Hilary McGrady, director for the National Trust in Kent.

"Of course we need development and economic growth, but not at any price.

"Kent is already under pressure for development and precious green-field sites around towns such as Ashford and Tunbridge Wells should not be up for grabs to every developer and volume house builder.

"We are now in a race against time to stop these reforms, and I urge everyone to make their voice heard."

The National Trust plans to submit a petition to ministers when a public consultation on the NPPF ends on October 17, and is urging people to sign up by October 7.

Members of the public can sign online at www.nationaltrust.org.uk/planning or in person at National Trust-owned properties such as Chartwell near Sevenoaks, and Scotney Castle near Lamberhurst.

Meanwhile, the chief executive of a Canterbury wildlife park is the author of a paper on land taxation discussed at the Lib Dem party conference last week.

Wildwood boss Peter Smith wrote a report for the ALTER (Action for Land Taxation and Economic Reform) group outlining how switching to a Land Value Tax (LVT) system would not only be beneficial for the economy, but would also help to protect wildlife by encouraging landowners to use their land in ways that benefit wildlife, rather than in ways that destroy it.

"Replacing income tax and taxes on real wealth with an LVT on all land in the UK will not only create jobs and boost the economy, but is the key to protecting our wildlife and conservation of natural resources," he said.

"The idea of LVT is not a new one; in fact it has been debated by politicians and economists for decades. It has had support from many high profile figures such as Lloyd George, Sir Winston Churchill and even Albert Einstein.

"In today's bleak economic times LVT is the clear answer to cutting unemployment, rescuing our economy from recession and saving wildlife."

■ Rainham and Gillingham Tory MP Rehman Chishti has written to Mr Clark demanding new wording in the planning policy to offer greater protection to playing fields.

The move has been backed by Sittingbourne and Sheppey Tory MP Gordon Henderson, who said: "There are relatively few playing fields in Sittingbourne and Sheppey and those we have must be preserved for use by both children and adults.

"I am keen to encourage my constituents to use the playing fields we have in the area as much as possible, in particular, for sporting activities as they will only have a long term future if they are fully utilised."

X FACTOR

Teen singing sensation closes in on making live X Factor finals

WESTGATE-ON-SEA youngster Luke Lucas is within a whisker of making it into the live finals of the X Factor after getting through boot camp.

The 16-year-old failed to dazzle as he had done in the first audition, but did enough in last weekend's show to convince judges he deserved a shot at the big prize.

He will now be one of the final eight in the boys group who travelled to Los Angeles to be mentored by Take That star Gary Barlow.

The youngster had won a standing ovation at his opening audition at London's the O2 to win a place at the tough boot camp stage of the competition, where the hopefuls were whittled down further.

But he stumbled with a disappointing performance of Cee-Lo Green's Forget You during the group challenge – which left the judges pondering his future.

However, they were so impressed with his opening audition they agreed to give him another chance and put him through to the next round of the contest.

DOCUMENTARY

Oscar winner plans new film to put pride back in his home town

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

AN OSCAR-winning documentary maker has called on the people of Margate to have more pride in their town.

Arnold Schwartzman – who scooped a 1981 Academy Award for his Holocaust film Genocide – grew up in the once-thriving seaside resort and says he is “sick and tired” of hearing people complain about its bad points.

The graphic designer moved to Hollywood more than 30 years ago, but has returned to Kent to film a new documentary entitled Margate Paradiso, which will mix archive footage with new interviews to show how the town has changed over the years.

“The main infrastructure of Margate is still there,” said Mr Schwartzman.

“It still has wonderful sunsets and beautiful beaches, and they’re going to rebuild Dreamland. I don’t think it will necessarily become a holiday destination again, but it has great potential as an educational and cultural centre, which it’s very rapidly becoming.

“I get sick and tired every time I go on YouTube and see these amateur filmmakers going around showing all the bad parts. Why show the seedy side of it?

“I know it’s easy for me to say living in Hollywood, but I grew up in Margate and spent the best days of my life there.

“I see a great future for the town and the new Turner Contemporary art gallery will absolutely help that along. So many people want to go and see it, even in Hollywood.”

Mr Schwartzman is a governor of the Kent-based University for the Creative Arts and is producing Margate Paradiso alongside another governor, Uwe Derksen.

As in the hit film Cinema Paradiso, the town’s cinema projection booth will become the central set of the movie and the story will be told through the use of film clips and still images. These will be combined with contemporary footage plus interviews with a number of people who will share their memories of Margate’s past.

al there is,” said Mr Schwartzman.

“There’s everything from feature films made here to early publicity films encouraging people to come here on holiday.

“For example, Thursday’s Children was a documentary about the Royal School for the Deaf in Margate, which won an Oscar in 1955, and there’s a scene in the 1923 Hitchcock film The White Shadow with someone pushing a pram along the promenade in Cliftonville. Of course, there are also more well-known scenes, like the Jolly Boys’ Outing in Only Fools and Horses.”

Mr Schwartzman, 75, said that while it is likely he will live out the rest of his days in Hollywood, he would like to have his ashes scattered in Margate.

He added: “I lived in Santa Monica for a few years, and there are so many other British people living there. They call it Santa Margate because it suffered a similar fate to Margate at one time. But it was developed and now it’s packed all the time. I can see that happening with Margate once developers realise the potential of the place.”

Meet the Lady of New York flying the flag for UK's farming industryBy Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

WHEN the New York-born widow of a former basketball team owner moved to Kent with her second husband, she found herself immersed in a rural life a world away from the Empire State.

Growing up with severe learning difficulties, few could have predicted Phyllis Kane would go on to become one of the pioneers of British farming and a staunch supporter of traditional country values.

But as the owner of the 4,500-acre Lees Court Estate in Faversham – the location of this week's East Kent Ploughing Match – the businesswoman known today as The Countess Sodes is continuing to prove people wrong.

"I followed my heart when I met the man who would become my second husband (Henry Herbert, the fifth Earl Sodes)," she said.

"But on his death (in 1996) it was like being thrown in at the deep end as someone with no background in farming. I didn't have that depth of knowledge, and it was out of ignorance that I had to think in different ways. I do go back to New York regularly, but this is very much my life now and always will be. I still have close family and friends in America, but continuing the way of rural life in Kent is absolutely central to who I am today."

In addition to the ploughing, Wednesday's event showcased horse-drawn ploughing, a fox-hound and beagle parade, fresh food stands, and more.

Visitors also had the chance to look behind the scenes of one of Britain's most forward-thinking estates, which specialises in non-food crops for use in heavy industry, medicine, beauty products, and bio-fuel.

But perhaps of most importance to Lady Sodes was the presentation of a "sustainable model for the countryside", whereby a number of partners agreed to work together for the good of the rural community.

These included Kent Wildlife Trust, the National Gamekeepers' Organisation, the Women's Food and Farming Union, Hol-lowshore Fisheries, and others.

Lady Sodes, whose first husband was then-Boston Celtics owner Robert Schmortz, said it was vital such organisations work together to ensure British farming survives.

"It's a very difficult time for agriculture and, like so much else, the direction of the industry seems to be going towards larger and larger farms," she said.

"But we at Lees Court have

CONCRETE VALUES:

Lady Sodes immersed herself in the ways of UK farming after the death of her husband in 1996, and is a champion of smaller farms always championed small farmers, as they are closest to the land and most knowledgeable about the issues affecting it.

"We are trying to highlight a sustainable model for the countryside that involves rural organisations working together, no matter how different they may be. The whole is greater than the sum of its parts and collectively we have a better chance to battle for what we believe in."

Pensions row will see second round of strike action hit universities

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

UNIVERSITY lecturers who went on strike over planned changes to their pensions have agreed to take part in a second round of industrial action.

Scholars based at the University of Kent campuses in Canterbury, Medway and Tonbridge downed tools in March after failing to stop a reduction in benefits through the Universities Superannuation Scheme (USS).

The proposals include an end to final-salary pensions for new members, the introduction of a pension age of 65, and the linking of pension increases to the lower Consumer Price Index (CPI) rate of inflation.

The lecturers who went on strike are all members of the University and College Union, and are threatening a prolonged course of action starting this month unless the body which oversees the pension scheme – the Universities and Colleges Employers Association (UCEA) – agrees to negotiate.

Otherwise a total of 52 universities will see disruption, including again the University of Kent.

"The idea is for a gradual progression, from lesser forms of industrial action to more extensive ones," said UCU Kent secretary Steve Holland, head of special collections at the university library.

"For example, the idea is that from October 10 we will work to our contracts, which means sticking to our contracted hours and not doing anything outside of that.

"I think people are pretty fed up with the way public sector pensions are going, especially among USS members when the scheme is actually in pretty good nick. There's no sign it's in desperate straits, and we feel the broad measures introduced aren't necessarily needed."

The university employers say the controversial changes to the scheme – which has about 130,000 active members – are necessary to cut the long-term cost of funding it.

Students' union members said in March they had agreed to back the UCU campaign despite the damage it could potentially cause to their degrees, and Mr Holland said lecturers and other staff were grateful for their support.

TICKED OFF: Lecturers downed chalk in March

He added: "We will be talking to the students because we're obviously concerned about the impact these pension changes will have on the quality of education.

"You can offer lecturers less, but will you get the best people applying or will they go abroad? Students will demand a higher level of service now they're having to pay higher tuition fees.

"It's in the students' best interests to have happy academics. As long as we keep in good contact, we can usually come to some kind of arrangement with them."

A UCEA spokesman said the organisation was disappointed by UCU's announcement of action.

He added: "The changes to the scheme were approved by the USS trustee board, which includes UCU representation, on June 9. This followed exhaustive negotiations and consultation.

"They are moderate by any standards and include the retention of a final salary pension for all existing USS members."

EXHIBITION

'Obscene' postcards banned by courts to go on display at university

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A CHEEKY collection of saucy seaside postcards seized by police in the 1950s for being too vulgar are being displayed at the University of Kent.

The tongue-in-cheek cartoon pictures, held by the British Cartoon Archive at the university, are part of a collection of 1,300 cards confiscated by police under the obscenity laws between 1951 and 1961.

During that period a number of artists, including the master of the lewd postcard Donald McGill, who produced 12,000 designs during his career, were arrested and charged with publishing obscene images, with numerous postcards banned.

But 60 years later, the innuendo-laden cards are being displayed in the I Wish I Could See My Little Willy exhibition at the university's Canterbury campus, following an inaugural display at the Pie Factory Gallery in Margate, which attracted more than 2,000 visitors. Events were also held at the town's old magistrates court, where many of the cards – synonymous with British seaside tradition – were first banned.

Dr Nick Hiley, curator of the British Cartoon

Archive, said he was pleased to be able to make the collection available to a wider audience.

"The seaside postcards in particular have already created a lot of interest," he said. "Not only are many of the cards still amusing, but they represent a landmark in social and legal history."

"They are a vivid illustration of how our notion of obscenity has changed over time – these postcards were considered offensive 60 years ago, but far more risqué material is now widely available via the internet."

The exhibited postcards are taken from 35,000 cartoons which have been digitised and made available online by the British Cartoon Archive, following a £150,000 grant by JISC, part of the Higher Education Funding Council.

The newly digitised cartoons include British political satirical images.

Dr Hiley said: "Among our online cartoons are 1,594 Margaret Thatchers which surprisingly, is more than our 1,225 Winston Churchills."

The I Wish I Could See My Little Willy exhibition runs until November 13 on Level One of the Templeman Library at the Canterbury campus.

History of rock legend Clapton the fruit of 47 years of work for writer

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

HE HAD the dream job.

Interviewing rock stars and socialising in smoky nightclubs surrounded by talented and upcoming musicians.

But for music journalist and author Chris Welch there was one that stood out among the rest, prompting him years later to write Clapton: The Ultimate Illustrated History, detailing the guitar legend's music career and personal life up to the present day.

"I first met him for an interview in a coffee bar when he was with the Yardbirds in 1964, and I had started working for Melody Maker. He was very cool and smartly dressed – it was in the mod period," said Welch, who lives in West Wickham, Bromley.

"Most of the boys in the band were excitable but he was slightly detached. He gave me a quizzical look as if to say 'sorry about them'.

"He always came across detached, I think it's because he knew he was very good, but he was modest about it. Once he got talking though he was outgoing.

"Eric was one of my favourite of the musicians; charming and helpful – he's one of those people who takes his career seriously and is very aware of his position in music."

Welch, 69, who has interviewed countless stars – from Jimi Hendrix to Dusty Springfield – in his successful career, formed a friendship with Clapton, going on the road with him in the 1960s and watching many of his smaller and more intimate gigs.

Welch, who published Clapton: The Ultimate Illustrated History last month, said there was always one memory that would stay with him.

"I went to Clapton's house in Surrey to interview him when he was preparing Blind Faith with Ginger Baker. There was a big drum kit which belonged to Baker. Before we knew it we were playing Well... All Right by Buddy Holly. I was in heaven – playing with Eric Clapton while all these hippies sat on the floor looking up in awe."

Welch's new book is the first illustrated history of Clapton's entire career right up to the present day, with candid and performance photography and memorabilia.

It details all of the guitar legend's acts and collaborations with artists including John Lennon, BB King and Frank Zappa, as well as details of his personal life, from his romance with George Harrison's then-wife Pattie Boyd and his battles with drinking in the 1970s.

Asked whether he had spoken to Clapton about his controversial racist speech while on stage at a 1976 concert in Birmingham where the guitarist ranted "stop Britain from becoming a black colony", Welch said: "He tried to explain it me. He tried to justify what he said and apologise for it at the same time. He was a big blues fan you see."

Welch, who witnessed Clapton's band Cream's first rehearsal, said he had the privilege of watching Cream reunited at the Royal Albert Hall and Madison Square Garden in 2005.

"He was much the same as when we met for our first interview. Older, wiser, but that friendly knowing grin was just as disarming."

Musician helping people to tune out of their addictions

RECOVERY: Former addict Jim Smith went to America to see how music is being used to help addicts through their problems, he is now using what he learnt to help people in this country

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

WHEN ageing musician Jim Smith saunters into addiction meetings wielding his trusty guitar, puzzled faces are an all-too-common reaction.

But after beating his own drink and drug problems more than three decades ago, the 62-year-old Beckenham resident is confident the music which saved his life can help other sufferers too.

Jim recently returned from a tour of America funded by the Winston Churchill Travelling Fellowship, and hopes to use what he learned in New York and Nashville in his own rehab project.

"At first people look at you and think 'who's this old guy with his guitar?'," said Jim. "I'm sure many of them think I want them to sing Kumbayah, but I usually win them round."

"I was a confident guitarist when I was a teenager and had a promising music career ahead of me, but my addiction stopped all that. Since I've been sober I've picked up where I left off and have spent the last 10 years travelling around rehab groups and telling my story through music."

"Music touches us at a deeper level than a lot of other things, and it's something that's given my life purpose because I use it to help others."

Jim, who is also a qualified social worker, says his addiction problems started almost as soon as he first started drinking as a 15-year-old. The former Sevenoaks resident also suffered from anxiety as a youngster, which led to him becoming hooked on valium prescribed by his doctor.

"My life went downhill," he said. "My drinking got me into a lot of trouble and by 21 I'd already spent a week in prison and been on probation."

"I was unemployable and ended up in hospital many times. But on one of these occasions I woke up in bed after coming out of intensive care, and for the first time in my life I thought 'I don't want to do this any more'. It was a rare moment of clarity for me, and it was amazing."

Applicants who receive funding from the Winston Churchill Travelling Fellowship must first prove that their reason for going abroad is to help people back in the UK.

While in America, Jim visited New York and discovered that professional musicians in recovery were also using music to help guide young people with their problems.

He also met a woman in Nashville who has collated a huge library of performers in recovery, and performed at the Betty Ford Center for drug and alcohol addiction in California.

"They are about 20 years ahead in America with this," said Jim. "I was inspired by how many places were using music in some way."

"It's given me more encouragement and determination to carry on with what I'm doing."

Sewage kills rare fish

ENDANGERED fish have been killed by a sewage leak into a brook.

Environment Agency officers have this week been investigating after dead fish were found in the Swalecliffe Brook, near Canterbury.

Around 300 sticklebacks and populations of eels, which are an endangered species, died.

Initial investigations have revealed the incident was caused by a sewage leak.

Contractors with specialist equipment were brought in to increase the levels of oxygen in the water so any further harm to wildlife and the environment was minimised.

The Environment Agency say it has traced the source, but would release no further details while the investigation was ongoing.

POLICING

From Kent to Kabul – top officer training Afghan police recruits

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

ONE OF Kent Police's specialists in dealing with critical incidents is halfway through his year-long stint in one of the world's most challenging policing environments.

Chief Inspector Martin Cunningham flew to Afghanistan in March to train senior Afghan police and support staff in command, control and communication.

Based in the capital Kabul, Chief Insp Cunningham has already trained more than 1,000 students at the new Afghan National Police Staff College in managing major incidents, emergencies, and firearms operations. In addition, he is running investigation courses for up to 20,000 Afghan officers.

Chief Insp Cunningham said: "I have had the privilege of working with policing professionals from around the world and from many disciplines.

"It has been like attending a master class in police training. Also I have learnt so much about different cultures and the background behind religious beliefs.

LEADING LIGHTS: Kent Police's Chief Insp Martin Cunningham (far right) with other officers from the UK involved in training the Afghan Police

"Restorative justice was one of the next big things in policing in the UK when I left.

"The Afghans have been engaged in community justice for centuries and whilst we may not always agree with their outcomes, one cannot help but be impressed by their engagement and tenacity when it comes to resolving disputes.

"There is challenge here on a daily basis. The other week I arrived back from a period of leave and that day was the day the Taliban chose to carry out complicated attacks on the city. I helped in the control of one of the bunkers, making critical decisions about people's safety while explosions and shots were happening close by.

"Some of the experiences of command, control and communication, and making critical decisions in challenging environments are things I will bring back to Kent with me. But the reality is that I will not understand the true value of what I have learnt until my return."

A police spokesman said: "This international mission is also set to benefit Kent Police, and therefore the people of Kent. For instance, stopping crime at source, particularly organised crime, is a tangible benefit of overseas missions."

Helmand return gives soldier chance to see country's change

A MAIDSTONE soldier has started a six-month deployment in Afghanistan where he will help provide logistical support to British Army personnel.

Sgt Sujan Limbu, 36, who is originally from Nepal, but is now based in Maidstone where his sister Chanda, 38 and brother Sachin, 31, live, serves with 1 Logistics Support Regiment (ILSR). He flew to Afghanistan last week.

During the six-month tour 420 personnel from 1LSR will be spread out across Helmand Province in support of the Germany-based 20th Armoured Brigade (the Iron Fist), providing transport and communications expertise and also working closely with the Afghan National Army to help prepare them to take over the security of their own country.

Sujan, who joined the Army in 1994 and has previously served in both Afghanistan and Iraq, will primarily work with members of the Afghan Army as an observer, helping them with general admin and working practices.

He said: "On my first tour in Afghanistan in 2008, I was a team commander looking for any improvised explosive devices planted by the Taliban.

"This time I will be spending a lot of time helping to train and work with members of the Afghan National Army. I can speak Urdu which should stand me in good stead with speaking with them." Sujan who is married to Babita, 38, and has two children Josam aged six and Jovan aged two, added: "I am looking forward to seeing how the country has changed and developed since I was last there. I hope to see more stability and the people really getting on. I am proud to be part of helping to get the country back on its feet.

"The most difficult part is leaving my family behind, but I hope I will be able to come back for Christmas to spend some time with them."

Hands off teachers' pensions

John Walder of the NUT explains why government pension proposals are so unfair

CHANGES to teachers' pensions have drawn much attention in recent days, but many may not know the full story.

The Kent division of the National Union of Teachers, at its September meeting, expressed the concern of its members at the Government's attitude to teachers' pensions.

This is an area of concern for all teachers, including those who have already retired and seen the beginning of the decline in their pensions with the undiscussed, unnegotiated switch in the index link from RPI to CPI made in April this year which brought about a 1.4 per cent decrease in pension values.

Our concern took the form of a motion, put forward by our colleagues from the Gravesham Association of the Kent division. I recount some of it here: "In the summer, increases of around 20 per cent in our [pension] contributions were announced. The Government also made it clear that this represents only 40 per cent of their intended increase. This, despite the Government's insistence that our protests are premature, because of ongoing negotiations.

"The issues involved in the Government's pension changes are well known and best summed up by our union's slogan: work longer – pay more – get less."

The motion explains the impact of these changes, with a career classroom teacher paying an extra £60,000-£70,000 in additional contributions, with the same amount again lost through the increase in pensionable age and the switch from RPI to CPI indexing.

The motion continues: "The Government argued changes to our pension were essential because of the financial crisis, that our pensions were simply unaffordable. But on the Today programme Evan Davies pointed out to Francis Maude that the Hutton Report, the Government's case for cutting our pensions, does not contain once, the word 'unaffordable'.

Maude was reduced to silence.

"Hutton helpfully stepped in, but in doing so revealed the truth. He now accepts that his report concludes that public service pensions are sustainable, affordability is a separate issue: 'I was trying to talk about sustainability. That can be measured as total cost proportion of GDP. Affordability is a different judgement, a political judgement.' (from www.leftfootforward.org).

"There is the key. The Government's claim that our pensions are no longer affordable is based on a political judgement, not the objective truth to which they pretend. By any objective measure our pensions are sustainable, affordable and reasonable."

Instead the Government now argues that our pensions are unfair because they are better than the private sector.

"It is hard to take such a claim seriously when one realises this difference has arisen because it is the private sector that has walked away from

The issues are best summed up by our union's slogan: work longer – pay more – get less reasonable pension provision... abandoning millions of workers to poverty in their old age."

The motion continues: "Average teacher pensions pitch teachers just outside much of the assistance from benefits. But private sector workers will collect smaller employment pensions and go on to claim income support and benefits.

"No-one should retire on a pension that requires them to claim benefits after a lifetime of hard work. But the truth is that taxpayers are subsidising inadequate private sector pensions through the benefit system.

"Teacher pensions are sustainable, properly-funded, and reducing in cost over the next 20 years. Private sector employee pensions are inadequate and condemn millions to poverty in old age.

"The Government should address this, rather than pursue this unreasonable and unjust attack on our pensions".

Ministers must face up to gypsies issue

WHILE the illegal traveller camp at Dale Farm has been Essex's problem for the last 10 years, the people who live there may soon become Kent's responsibility instead.

But regardless of where this 400-strong community ends up, it should be the Government stepping forward with a long-term solution to the UK's gypsy camp woes.

While travellers are perfectly entitled to their way of life, they must not be allowed to flout long-held planning laws whenever they see fit. Those in power need to ensure it's not one rule for them and another for everyone else.

Sadly it's not, but that won't stop people like Oscar-winner Arnold Schwartzman talking up the town's future prospects. And nor should it – Margate is still full of potential.

Gurkhas more use in Nepal

LIKE, I suspect, many other readers I am appalled by the comments of MP Gerald Howarth on treating the Gurkhas like asylum seekers, as stated in the article by Marijke Cox (KoS, September 25).

However, I feel that giving the Gurkhas equal settlement rights might have been a mistake for many reasons.

Firstly, that despite getting more money, they could live in their native Nepal and have a better lifestyle for less than it costs to live in the UK.

Secondly, there is very little work for them here whereas, I suspect, there is plenty of work in Nepal, such as sherpas, farmers, medical staff or guides.

Thirdly, there are many villages in Nepal that have no real access except by foot; while this is fine for the fit, in the case of an emergency this can cause many problems, as even the excellent Nepalese Himalayan Rescue Service Helicopters find it almost impossible to land near these villages. Work needs to begin on constructing helipads near these villages.

The money saved by the UK government in not having to keep these excellent ex-soldiers on the dole, as I suspect some are, should be used to help the Nepalese Government in building these needed helipads and improving hospitals.

The Nepalese government could also increase the charges on the numerous visitors, especially climbers, to help fund improvements.

I feel this would be a far better way of thanking these brave soldiers than just keeping them in either low-paid jobs or on the dole.

I would like to be proved wrong, but I am not sure I will be.

Christianity is not to blame

DAVID Burgess raises the old chestnut about religion causing all the troubles in the world (Letters, September 25).

This could be partly true about false religion, where religions are hijacked by extremists bent on pursuing their own agenda, but for religions per se this is patently untrue.

As far as Christianity is concerned, Christ told us to 'turn the other cheek', to 'love your enemy' and 'to love your neighbour'.

I don't remember Hitler, Stalin, Pol Pot and the many others responsible for the mass slaughter of humanity being avid followers of any religion. In fact just the opposite.

The BBC are ditching BC and AD for the Common era (whatever that is); a doctor has been threatened with arrest and loss of livelihood for talking to a patient about Jesus; a café owner is going to be prosecuted for showing Bible DVDs in his café, and Mr Burgess wants Christianity eradicated from our lives.

The pseudo-Christian religions have sat on their hands as Christianity has gradually becoming marginalised, supposedly to stop offence to others.

Never mind the offence to Christians who have done nothing wrong.

Phil Granger, West Malling

Have faith in your own time

I QUITE agree with David Burgess – religion should be taught at home or at Sunday school or the equivalent, not at school.

Above all I believe faith schools are a mistake – they are divisive.

Schools should be inclusive and should reflect the diversity of the wider community.

Elizabeth Lonkhurst,

The same old Ukip claptrap

UNSURPRISINGLY, Nigel Farage wants to blame immigrants for our housing problems (KoS, September 25).

There are two main reasons why we have a housing crisis.

Firstly, councils no longer build houses, largely because tenants then have the right to buy. This policy may have won votes for the Conservatives, but it has done nothing for the nation's housing stock.

Secondly, when agricultural or commercial land gets planning permission for housing its value magically soars, making housing unaffordable for the great majority of would-be new buyers. Builders won't build what they can't sell.

Over the last 30-plus years, with our support, politicians have protected landowners and have ignored the many.

The cause of the housing crisis lies with us.

Blaming immigrants is exactly the sort of foreigner-bashing claptrap to be expected from Ukip.

David Hopker, Broadstairs

Farage views wide of mark

NIGEL Farage is wrong, as usual (KoS, September 25). Neither the Green Party nor any of the other political parties he mentions have ever advocated uncontrolled immigration.

This is complete nonsense.

The Green Party supports a migration system that is legal, fair and safe for all. Neither the previous nor the current government have provided this. Funds for specialist units in the police service to tackle trafficking have never been adequate, and planned cuts will make this situation worse.

He is also wrong about the impact of inward migration on housing.

First, we have more than 700,000 empty homes in the country and 22,000 here in Kent and Medway.

With industrial derelict sites and long-term empty shop-fronts, we could be employing more people usefully in the construction sector country-wide and providing housing for the 1.8 million households on council waiting lists.

Apart from the failure of successive governments to emphasise refurbishment over new build in housing, our main population problem in Kent and Medway is the continuing movement of people out of London into Kent; internal migration not immigration is the issue.

As long as government chooses to undervalue and underinvest in our poorest UK regions the flow of people into Kent from London will tend to continue as the capital continues to be our major employment centre and housing in London is notoriously expensive to rent or buy.

Dr Hazel Dawe, campaigns officer, Kent Green Party

Open not shut case, owners

I'M sure Folkestone isn't the only town where one sees dogs muzzled outside supermarkets.

One Dalmatian pup I saw recently was so friendly and was trying to lick my hand, but it couldn't.

It makes me so mad to see animals treated like that.

There are so many docile breeds of dog with straps around their jaws.

The poor things can't even open their mouths.

When will the idiots (you know who you are) stop being so cruel to their so-called pet?

A dog that is known to be unfriendly to other animals and humans is usually made that way by its owner; no dog is born vicious.

So please, all you owners of docile pets treat them with a little more kindness.

Try putting a strap around yourself and see how you would like it if you couldn't open your mouth.

Getting a mortgage with a small deposit

Q Do you know anything about the 100pc mortgages offered by Aldermore Bank, please? In particular, what are the drawbacks, if any? I ask because our son is finding it impossible to get a home loan, as he and his wife can only afford a deposit of about £20,000. Lenders will provide only about 75pc of the purchase price of a house or flat, which means all he can raise in total is roughly £80,000, which is not enough.

A The good news for homebuyers is that someone – anyone! – is actually offering 100pc mortgages. The bad news for homebuyers is that they come with more strings attached than a whole sorting office full of old-fashioned Christmas parcels. Let's start with the good bits. You may never have heard of Aldermore (www.aldermore-mortgages.co.uk), but it is a genuine bank, based in Peterborough, and fully licensed by the Financial Services Authority. This means that if you get into a dispute, you can go to the ombudsman. And if you are a saver, your money deposited with Aldermore is protected up to £85,000. The mortgage scheme launched by the bank recently charges interest at 6.48pc, fixed for the first three years, after which the rate is variable. And your son could borrow up to £250,000, repayable over 25 years, assuming he can afford the repayments. On the downside, getting a 100pc mortgage costs almost £1,300 in fees. And the scheme is aimed at over-25s, so younger house-hunters will have to look elsewhere or wait a while. But the biggest string attached to Aldermore's 100pc loans is the one that will bind you and your wife hand and foot for the next 10 years! For your son to get his 100pc loan, you must guarantee the repayments. If he defaults, you have to pay Aldermore. And if you default, then your own home is at risk as well as his. This guarantee would run for the first 10 years of your son's mortgage. After that, you can breathe easy and your son is on his own. In fact, the guarantee could end earlier if your son repays enough to bring the mortgage down to 75pc instead of 100pc. Aldermore is the first British bank to dip a toe in these waters all the way. Similar schemes have demanded a deposit. But unless property prices fall sharply, it could be the shape of home loans for the future, particularly for first-time buyers. It will be interesting to see if Aldermore succeeds and if other banks follow suit.

Q I inherited a significant sum in shares from an Irish relative. The dividends are paid and taxed in euros, and then taxed again in this country. I would like to put the shares into a British tax-free Isa. Can I arrange this myself, or do I have to use an existing firm that provides Isas?

TONY HETHERINGTON

A I am afraid you face a double difficulty. None of us is allowed to run our own tax-exempt Individual Savings Account. We all have to go to an Isa manager licensed by HM Revenue. Managers include banks, building societies, insurance companies, financial advisers, and even some supermarkets that offer savings schemes. They make sure investors do not try to sidestep tax by putting in more than the permitted annual amount. But even if you did go to a licensed manager, you would still not be able to transfer your shares into an Isa. The Isa can only hold shares that the manager has bought on your behalf, and not shares that you inherited or received in a windfall. The only exception to this rule is shares received under an employee share scheme. I am afraid you will have to choose an Isa manager, ask for your shares to be sold, and then – if you like those shares – ask the manager to buy them for you. But remember, you are only allowed to invest up to £10,680 this year.

Q I have a small annuity from an old pension policy. As my wife and I divorced last year, am I entitled to stop her inheriting the annuity on my death?

A Most couples deal with pension rights as part of their divorce settlement. If your agreement did not cover your annuity, then a lot depends on the small print. If the policy names your wife as a beneficiary, it is unlikely you can change this now. However, if it simply says that your annuity will pass to any wife who survives you, then you may not need to change anything, as you no longer have a wife. But play safe. Ask the pension company, or even your solicitor.

Heat is on to keep fuel bills down

SPIRALLING energy bills and a smattering of predictions of another harsh winter mean that keeping your energy spend down is more important than ever.

As the spectre of fuel poverty looms large for thousands of people, householders are working out how to reduce their bills where possible.

Beyond switching suppliers, there are some practical steps to take in the home.

Although it can produce quite a lot of noise while being installed, cavity-wall insulation harnesses the heat generated in the home meaning substantial savings on energy bills. The benefits can be felt instantly.

A specialist installer should always be sought for this type of job so ensure you choose a member who is Cavity Insulation Guarantee Agency (CIGA) qualified.

Draught stripping, where specialist strips of foam are installed around windows and doors, will significantly reduce draughts and air permeation in your home, helping to retain the heat and saving you money.

Costing around £50-£80 depending on whether you install it yourself or not, draught-stripping can save up to £20 per year for a gas-heated semi-detached house.

Consider replacing your boiler if it is old and inefficient.

This can be a big financial hit, but should pay off. A bit of simple home-

COSY AT A COST: With a cold winter forecast and the rising cost of energy the pressure is on for householders to keep bills down by taking practical steps.

work will tell you how many years it will take before the investment starts to be worthwhile.

Trade-in incentives are still available for this kind of purchase; check the funding database on the Energy Saving Trust website.

Loft insulation and pipe cladding should also be considered as energy saving measures.

Peter Bolton King, chief executive of the National Association of Estate Agents (NAEA), said: "It is important that homeowners are aware of the options available to them when looking to make their homes warmer this winter.

"With bills on the rise, these measures can make a real difference, as well as having the welcome side-effect of increasing the carbon efficiency of their property.

"Many of these measures can be applied on different scales, and for this reason whilst doing DIY is very admirable, we urge any homeowner to seek the advice of professionals when looking to install energy and heat saving measures in the home."

Pay attention to your policy details

PLANNING your car insurance around the dangers posed by uninsured drivers may be attractive to some drivers, but make sure you are aware of what you are buying.

Nearly one-fifth of motor insurance policies offer policyholders enhanced protection if hit by an uninsured driver.

In 17pc of cases, comprehensive car insurance policies will protect a policyholder's no claims discount and not apply an excess if they are involved in an accident caused by an uninsured driver.

This has increased from 13pc of policies in 2009.

Some 18pc of policies will not apply an excess in these circumstances, a figure which has grown from 10pc in the same period.

But the Defaqto analysis comes with an associated warning for motorists – to pay close attention to policy details to ensure it is clear what the policy covers and what are the exact conditions.

tion for accidents caused by uninsured drivers.

"However, it is also true to say that a relatively limited proportion of policies offer this feature, and most apply fairly stringent criteria when it comes to making a claim under this area of cover.

"As always, people should seek to match what they need from car insurance with the features that different policies provide when comparing what is available on the market – although important, price should never be the main reason for choosing a policy.

"As for many areas, when it comes to uninsured driver benefit, given the still limited and variable nature of cover available, taking time to understand the policy details could pay dividends in the long-run.

"In particular, motorists need to understand what protection a policy would provide in these circumstances and any restrictions they would face on making a claim."

Drivers are now known to value protection against uninsured drivers more highly than ever before – presumably a reflection of the large numbers of uninsured drivers on our roads and the increased media attention focused on this danger.

What policyholders need to bear in mind is that the majority of motor insurance policies that provide this enhanced protection against uninsured drivers require certain details to be provided in the event of a claim, including vehicle details and the uninsured driver's name and address.

The very nature of uninsured driving may make these details difficult to come by.

Mike Powell, Defaqto's insight analyst for general insurance, said: "Our research has found that a growing number of motor insurance policies offer enhanced protec-

Optimism rising as companies are expecting an increase in turnover

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

BUSINESSES in the South East continue to feel affected by economic uncertainty and market volatility but are more confident about their own prospects than that of the wider economy over the next 12 months.

According to new research by Clydesdale Bank, more than half (58 per cent) of the businesses questioned in the South East expected to increase turnover by more than 5 per cent in the year ahead, despite less than a quarter (24 per cent) being confident the economy would return to healthy growth.

Despite their concerns about the economy, 46 per cent were planning to invest at least 5 per cent of their turnover back into their business in the next 12 months, with priorities being new staff, equipment, training existing employees and developing new products and services.

The most pressing concerns are support for research-and-development costs and fluctuating fuel prices, with 26.5 per cent and 25 per cent citing these issues as the key factors in their businesses' future growth.

Will Lindsay, regional director for Clydesdale Bank, said: "Businesses are clearly more confident and in control of their own destiny than they are for the wider economy, despite the impact of rising fuel and materials prices.

OPTIMISTIC:

Clydesdale Bank's Will Lindsay

"Our research highlighted what businesses in the south feel will help them and the economy, with increased consumer spending and confidence (20.6 per cent) and low interest rates and the strength of the pound (both 20 per cent) coming out as the key drivers to economic growth.

"It is inevitable that there will continue to be bumps in the road to recovery, but businesses should continue to focus on their strengths."

Across the industries nationally, IT and telecoms businesses appear to be the most confident, with more than half (51 per cent) expecting increased turnover of at least 5 per cent in the next 12 months. Healthcare and education businesses are the least confident, with only 32 per cent and 23 per cent respectively expecting similar growth.

This is mirrored in their investment intentions, with 59 per cent of IT and telecoms businesses planning to invest at least 5 per cent of turnover back into the business compared with only 27 per cent of education-focused businesses.

Lindsay said: "Clydesdale Bank is working with hundreds of companies which have the confidence to invest. Our commitment to supporting trading businesses is stronger than ever and we continue to attract growing numbers of owner-managed small and medium-sized businesses plus mid-corporates. Good businesses with strong management and robust business plans will generally find support.

"This is evidenced by the fact we recently met our promise, three months ahead of schedule, to deliver our two-year pledge to advance £10 billion of new lending to customers."

PROMOTION

Small firms missing out on social media

THE county's businesses are missing out on the chance to generate income through social media, says a new study.

Despite having access to a wealth of social media channels, no small or medium enterprises in Kent which took part in a recent survey use the likes of LinkedIn or Twitter to generate new business prospects.

The study by TalkTalk Business was conducted to see how much SMEs in Kent embraced social media and gained from its business benefits.

A total of 38 per cent of SMEs in Kent are not confident using social media – with the North East (69 per cent) the most confident.

Paul Lawton, of TalkTalk Business, said: "Social media can prove invaluable as a new business tool and so it's worrying to see that so few SMEs in Kent are embracing it.

"Benefits range from being able to engage and understand the needs of customers and prospects through to gaining insights into target markets and perceptions of your organisation."

BAKERY

Sisters combine business and play with parties for children

TWO sisters are aiming to inject some creative fun into children's birthdays with the launch of their innovative cupcake-decorating party business.

Anna Hinde and Gemma Hawkins launched Eden Bakery in Sittingbourne at the end of June and since then the orders have been flying in for the sisters' handcrafted cupcakes, made fresh to order.

And now the pair have decided to turn their cupcake-baking and making skills into a party theme for children, encouraging them to be as colourful and creative as they like.

Anna said: "The idea for the children's cupcake-decorating parties came after a friend said she wanted to throw one for her daughter but didn't have the time to organise it. Gemma and I stepped in to help, and it's snowballed from there."

Gemma said: "Children love baking and getting messy and we can help the birthday girl or boy decorate their own cakes."

The parties are aimed at children aged five to 12. Each child has four ready-made cakes to decorate and take away (no baking required for busy mums) and Eden Bakery provides coloured-buttercream icing and decorations.

INHERITANCE

We're driven to leave something for the kids

BUSINESSES in the South East are focusing on the next generation, with almost a fifth (19 per cent) of owners planning to build their company as an inheritance for family members, according to research from Santander Corporate Banking.

The research underlines the importance of family-run firms to the economy – a recent study on behalf of the Unquoted Companies Group estimates some 21 per cent of all UK workers are employed by family-run firms.

Companies say being able to pass on a legacy is a strong motivating force in business.

Santander's nationwide study also revealed firms in the South East are highly committed to expanding their businesses in the long term – with about 80 per cent of owners citing their ultimate business aim as ensuring their business has a long-term future.

Carlos Portela, divisional managing director for the South East at Santander Corporate Banking, said: "Being able to pass on an inheritance to the next generation is powerful motivation."

RECYCLING

Sweet smell of success for new eco partnership

ECOSAN is the first Kent business to offer sanitary, nappy and incontinence recycling by working in partnership with Knowaste, the UK's first-ever facility for recycling nappies.

The Ashford company was founded by husband-and-wife team Carl and Sonja Wood in 2007 to offer green solutions for sanitary and nappy disposal and water supplies.

Sonja said: "We divert 98 per cent of all sanitary and nappy waste from landfill. Other suppliers choose to landfill nappies, which take 500 years to break down, or use incineration facilities. We're delighted to be first to offer this cost-effective, environmentally-safe, recycling solution.

"In the UK, more than one million tonnes of AHP waste is generated annually, much of which is landfilled, a significant amount of which is produced by the commercial sector.

"We're determined to reduce this figure while helping cut our customers' carbon output and saving them money."

Roy Brown, of Knowaste, said: "Through developing partnerships with green suppliers such as EcoSan to tackle recycling AHP waste, we are able to help both commercial operators and local authorities to cut carbon emissions, increase recycling and divert waste from landfill."

Green projects come up trumps for 'golden' hotel

THE Ashford International Hotel has been awarded the prestigious Gold Accreditation by the Green Tourism Business Scheme (GTBS), the national sustainable tourism certification programme.

Projects undertaken by the hotel include the installation of an electric-car-charging station to enable owners of Tesla electric cars to charge their vehicles, use of a Sea-V water-infiltration system in association with charity Pump Aid Africa, recycling used coffee grounds as fertiliser for the newly-created kitchen garden and recycling of glass bottles, paper and cardboard from all bedrooms, conference suits and restaurants.

The hotel also helped support a family fun day for Friends of the William Harvey Hospital to help raise funds for a digital mammography machine, donated Easter eggs to Demelza House Children's Hospice and participated in the Can't See The Wood For The Trees project carried out by local artist Cathy Streeter as part of the Revealing Ashford arts festival.

Deirdre Billing, general manager at the hotel, said: "As well as our community initiatives, our conference carbon offsetting package gives delegates the chance to offset the carbon they use at the hotel to benefit carbon-reduction projects worldwide."

Online training scheme a Yummy idea for pubs

PULLING POWER: The team from Yummy Pub Co celebrate winning The Publicans Award for Best British Pub in 2010

By Joe Bill

joe.bill@archant.co.uk

AN INDEPENDENT local business has started a management-training academy for the next generation of publicans and landlords.

The Yummy Pub Co, which owns The Grove Ferry Inn, near Canterbury, and The Wiremill Inn, near East Grinstead, has developed a full training package for ambitious individuals looking to start a career in the British pub trade.

The company was set up in 2007 by four individuals who loved the pub trade and wanted to help rejuvenate struggling venues. The businesses slogan is 'More than just a pub' and the pubs they have taken on are definitely that.

The Wiremill has won three national awards in the last two years, including the Publicans Award for Britain's Best Pub, while The Grove Ferry, which was acquired in late 2009, won the regional award for best leased pub at The Morning Advertiser Awards.

Anthony Pender, founding partner of the business, said: "It was important to develop a top team at all of our sites to make sure both the service received by guests and the food offered was second to none and great value for money. Over time this has morphed into our very own Yummy Academy."

The business has already developed four members of staff through to pub managers and is now looking to recruit new ambitious team-members who want to make their way in the industry.

The training has been developed into seven stages using a groundbreaking online system, created in partnership with CPL Training.

The online facility allows each member of the team to log on and track their own progress while they complete a number of online courses. The training starts before team-members even start the job as they go for both health-and-safety and food-safety certificates.

This is followed by workshops and work-based training, including courses in customer service, leadership, basic accounting and food knowledge. By the end of the seven stages the individual will be able to run a busy successful pub and manage a strong team.

The Yummy Pub Co is open for applicants, with training positions available at both the Grove Ferry and Wiremill, with additional positions available at a new site in central London, which includes accommodation. Individuals have the opportunity to train in front of house or kitchen management.

Applicants should apply via the website www.yummypubco.wordpress.com.

Channel chamber gives its support to airports growth

AIRPORT development can help the economy of east Kent to grow, the Channel Chamber of Commerce is claiming.

Chief executive Peter Hobbs says he is behind plans to expand operations at both Manston and Lydd airports.

"This week saw the end of the public inquiry reviewing the multi-million investment plans for developing Lydd airport," he said.

"At the same time, only 40 miles away, Manston airport is anxiously awaiting permission for night-flights that will help transform it into a viable regional airport.

"Both of these commercial airports have clearly demonstrated the economic and job-creation benefits of their plans and Kent Channel Chamber and its members are solidly behind both developments.

"Anyone who has lived in east Kent for all or part of the past 50 years will know how valuable visitors are to our local economy – by land sea or air.

"Ironically, while the economic climate continues to struggle, there is very positive evidence that the east Kent coastal towns and villages are benefiting from many more visitors from both the UK and abroad.

"We should never forget just how attractive east Kent is as a key transport hub which includes two cross-Channel ferry ports, two international airports, Eurotunnel and, not least, the new high-speed rail link."

AWARDS

Environmental concerns shine through in review

THE new Best Western Dover Marina Hotel and Spa has achieved a Silver Grading at its first inspection by the Green Tourism Business Scheme.

Employees say the award reflects their concern in achieving environmentally-concerned targets and save on waste products.

To achieve a grading from the scheme, an organisation must have a strong environmental policy together with procedures and a plan in place to minimise energy consumption.

Part of this plan includes buying provisions and other necessary items locally wherever possible.

Positivity is driving up recruitment

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

DESPITE economists' growing fears that the world economy is heading on a downward spiral, local businesses remain optimistic about the year ahead, which is helping to drive recruitment activity across South East.

Figures show that two-thirds of companies – 66 per cent – are currently recruiting at similar levels to before the recession, compared with just 48 per cent in Q1 of 2011.

And, according to the fourth Tracking UK Recruitment quarterly report by professional staffing recruitment consultancy Barclay Meade, the number of companies in the South East operating under a recruitment freeze also fell for the fourth consecutive quarter, down from 17 per cent in Q4 2010 to 10 per cent in the first half of this year.

The report, which aims to provide insight into the effects of the current economic climate on the recruitment strategies of medium and large organisations in the UK, confirms a growing sense of buoyancy among businesses.

Despite the latest GDP figures revealing the UK economy grew by only 0.2 per cent in the three months to June, almost three-quarters of firms in the South East – 71 per cent – claim they are "optimistic" or "very optimistic" about business performance over the next 12 months.

Barclay Meade's report also reveals firms in the South East are looking to fill vacancies across all areas of their business. Almost a third, 31 per cent, are looking to fill administrative roles, with

NEW STAFF WANTED: Two-thirds of companies say they are now recruiting at pre-recession levels

29 per cent seeking middle managers and 24 per cent looking to recruit to senior managerial positions. However, according to the report by Barclay Meade – part of the AIM-listed recruitment business Matchtech Group PLC – candidates' skill shortages continues to be the biggest recruitment challenge for 29 per cent of firms in the South East, a concern for education providers given that four out of 10 firms are recruiting at graduate or entry level.

Employers in the South East also vented their frustration at how many potential employees look far better on paper than they do in practice, with almost half, 45 per cent, failing to live up to expectations when it comes to the interview stage. Firms in the South East identified rising fuel prices and the threat of a double-dip recession as the two factors most likely to have the biggest negative impact on recruitment strategies over the next 12 months, suggesting employers in the region fear circumstances beyond their control are likely to impact on the fragile recovery in the domestic economy.

Anton Roe, director at Barclay Meade, said: "Recruitment continues to be a contentious issue for many organisations across the UK, but our report clearly shows South East businesses continue to respond well to ongoing economic challenges as the number of firms operating under a recruitment freeze falls for the fourth consecutive quarter.

"It will be interesting to see in the next report if business-leaders maintain this level of hiring throughout the remainder of the year as financial markets in the US and eurozone come under increasing pressure and fears of a double-dip recession rise.

"For now, it is encouraging to see an increase in the demand for job candidates in the South East, with employers looking to fill vacancies across the business. This will provide hope to staff affected by the Government's austerity measures that are gradually entering the job market.

"Competition for roles among candidates is increasingly keen, but the upshot of this is that employers will be able to consider individuals who have precisely the level of experience required to fill vacancies."

New understanding set to show firms why they should Locate in Kent

THE county's many business strengths are set to reach a wider audience after investment promotion agency Locate in Kent signed a landmark agreement with UK Trade and Investment (UKTI).

The Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) will see Locate in Kent become UKTI's sole point of contact in the county and is aimed at securing maximum levels of overseas investment for Kent.

The investment specialists signed the deal in order to further bolster its working relationship after Regional Development Agencies – previously used as an intermediary between the organisations – were abolished.

Paul Wookey, chief executive at Locate in Kent, said: "The MoU will be of benefit to us and UKTI and will lead to a much closer working relationship both in London and overseas than we already enjoy.

"The agreement gives us access to a pipeline of projects that may be suited to Kent and enable us to access UKTI expertise to hone our proposition to overseas companies.

BENEFIT: Paul Wookey says the agreement will boost the county's working relationship with London and overseas

"We can now also assist UKTI in providing more in-depth responses to leads they secure, presenting a more complete response to companies interested in relocating and expanding in Kent.

"The MoU is of particular relevance now as we continue to work closely with UKTI and other partner organisations to find buyers and occupiers for Discovery Park, the Pfizer site, which has recently gained Enterprise Zone status."

A UKTI spokesman said: "Through signing this MoU, Locate in Kent will gain access to the national pipeline of leads and a range of support from us for existing leads, including support for local proposition development and benchmarking, greater efficiency in targeting, and high-level support.

"This offers Kent the opportunity to achieve greater investment from overseas and improve the county's offer through more compelling local inputs and by better utilising existing knowledge of local assets and capabilities, which can be put forward to clients.

"It is also intended to ensure greater efficiency through optimising the use of collective resources such as sector intelligence and market understanding."

Skills course for underprivileged

A COURSE aimed at helping disadvantaged teenagers achieve future business success is being held this week.

The five-day Youth Leadership Summit starts on Monday, October 3, at Grosvenor Hall in Ashford, and is run by the Knowledge to Action Foundation.

Throughout the week the teenagers will be mentored by various industry experts focusing on a range of personal development techniques across the areas of health, relationships, wealth, leadership and learning.

A number of team-building exercises will also be utilised, such as climbing and zip-lining.

"The Knowledge to Action Foundation has raised significant sums of money for charities such as Barnardo's and the Ubuntu Education Fund but we want to be a hands-on initiative as well," said founder Greg Secker.

"We are in the fantastic position of being able to enhance the lives of children, giving them opportunities and learning tools they wouldn't otherwise have access to until later in life."

Career boost for AXA apprentices

TUNBRIDGE Wells-based health insurance company AXA PPP Healthcare has recruited nine apprentices as part of a programme developed with K College.

The new recruits were chosen from 166 applicants and will be employed within the firm's customer service team for 11 months while also working towards several relevant qualifications including Key Skills and City & Guilds certificates.

They will then be able to consider moving onto other roles in the company, such as in marketing, IT, finance, sales, and HR.

Membership and people director Sonia Wolsey Cooper said: "At AXA PPP Healthcare, providing the best support to our members through excellent customer service is at the heart of our business."

"Our customer service apprenticeship programme provides a fantastic chance for talented individuals who have an appetite for success to acquire the experience that can ultimately open doors to a world of opportunity."

Master craftsmen reap fruits of labour

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

THE quality of Kent apprenticeships was clear for all to see when two dedicated tradesmen picked up awards at Britain's biggest skills competition.

Michael Chalmers, 21, who trains at K College and works for Folkestone-based JCL Decorating and Building Services, took home a gold medal in the painting and decorating category at the annual SkillBuild event, while 37-year-old Folkestone resident Rupert Davis won a silver in stonemasonry.

The competition saw both trainees battle it out with other competitors at an intense three-day final which took place at Leeds College of Building.

Scoring top marks in his category, Michael was also awarded the title of Apprentice Decorator of the Year and presented with a trophy and cheque for £1,000 as a result.

"I couldn't believe it, it was brilliant," he said. "I knew I'd done well but I thought some of the other competitors had done better than me so I was absolutely amazed to be called up to the stage to collect my prize."

"I'm really grateful to everyone who's supported me, especially my tutor Bruce Kerney at K College. I would never have entered this competition if it wasn't for him, so I hope he's really proud of what I've achieved."

"It's a great competition and I've really enjoyed it. I just want to keep learning more and developing new skills to be the best I can be, and hopefully go far in the industry."

SkillBuild – which is managed by the sector skills council and industry training board CITB-ConstructionSkills – saw more than 100 talented tradesmen and women compete for the top spot in their respective lines of work.

The competitors made it through to the UK final after achieving the highest scores at 15 regional heats held across the UK between March and May.

They were marked on the essential skills needed to work in the sector, including following detailed instructions, producing accurate work outputs, being economical with materials, and working to strict timescales.

Both Michael and Rupert now stand a chance of representing the UK at the next WorldSkills competition due to take place in Leipzig, Germany, in 2013. A number of winners from previous SkillBuild competitions will be taking part in the WorldSkills event due to be held this week in London.

CITB deputy chair Judy Lowe said: "We are extremely proud of all the trainees who competed at the UK final. The high level of talent and skill we have seen is testament to the solid foundations laid by organisations such as ourselves, industry employers and training providers, and we are grateful for the continued support of the competition."

"SkillBuild demonstrates the huge talent and ability of those young people working within the industry, showcasing the professionalism of the sector as a whole and helping to encourage new blood into the industry."

TALENTED: Rupert Davis, 37, won a silver award in stonemasonry at the contest

Criminal behaviour at university's new centre of forensic psychology

THE University of Kent has opened a new Centre of Research and Education in Forensic Psychology.

Police, MPs, criminologists, psychologists and members of the probation and prison services were among the 200 guests invited to the day-long launch event.

It involved a programme of presentations, talks and symposiums on topics ranging from street gangs, corporate crime and sexual harassment, to stalking, arson and forensic uses of face perception.

Centre director Dr Theresa Gannon described the subject as a "modern branch of psychology that seeks to understand the psychological processes underlying offending behaviour, victim responses to offending, the mechanisms underlying the criminal justice system more generally, and attitudes to offenders and offender re-integration in society".

She added: "The main aim of the centre is to conduct high-impact psychological research to further understand key forensic issues of social significance and lead to cutting-edge teaching and research opportunities for post-graduate students."

Subjects currently being researched by forensic psychologists at the university include bullying in prisons, jury decision-making, female sex offending, aggression and alcohol, and rape.

Kitchen battle for ambitious young chefs

SECONDARY school children are being urged to cook up a storm by competing for the third annual Kent Young Chef Award.

The competition challenges youngsters in years seven to 11 to devise and write an original main course recipe using autumnal and Kentish ingredients.

Celebrity chef Richard Phillips and a panel of judges will be at the live cook-off final on Friday, November 25, which will be held at the View Restaurant at K College's Tonbridge campus.

The Kent Young Chef Award is the brainchild of local food and drink champion Produced in Kent and is aimed at encouraging secondary school children back into the kitchen.

Produced in Kent manager Julie Monkman said: "With Kent Young Chef Award entering its third year we have a huge groundswell of support from our sponsoring companies and secondary school food technology departments, who have applauded what Produced in Kent is doing.

"Kent Young Chef Award has not only raised young people's awareness of the fantastic array of produce grown here in the Garden of England, it has also seen hundreds of children creating original recipes and creatively cooking again.

"For those who have made it to the live final it has proved a life-changing experience, with several of our finalists now pursuing a career as a chef."

The authors of the eight best recipes will travel to K College for the live cook-off, with all

JUDGE: Richard Phillips will be at the cook-off receiving a host of prizes including a mini-chef experience and lunch at one of Richard Phillips' restaurants, a Kent Young Chef Award apron, and a framed certificate.

Their recipes will also all be published on the Produced in Kent website.

The two winners of the junior and senior titles will be presented with a trophy each and a hamper packed with local Kentish produce. They will also have the chance to design a three-course menu and be treated as guests of honour at Woods in Tunbridge Wells.

Email your entry to youngchef@wacpr.com before Friday, October 28.

University given a Baseline as magazine celebrates student links

THE close working relationship between Baseline magazine and the University for the Creative Arts is the subject of a new exhibition.

Over the last 17 years, Baseline – the international typography publication – has employed 20 students and graduates from UCA Maidstone's visual communication and illustration courses.

The new exhibition, which will be held at the campus' George Rodger Gallery from October 10 to November 4, will be free of charge and open to the public.

Baseline magazine's editor Hans Reichert said: "The relationship with UCA Maidstone has been hugely beneficial.

"We have worked with some incredibly talented and skilled people over the years, and their contribution to the editorial design and layout of the magazine has been invaluable.

"During their stay at Baseline, the students experienced first-hand contact with our high-profile contributors such as Arnold Schwartzman, Alan Fletcher, Adrian Frutiger, Ken Garland, David Gentleman, Ivan Chermayeff, David Carson, Neville Brody, Sir Terence Conran and best-selling author Steven Heller.

"We wanted to celebrate this collaboration by putting on an exhibition of work created over the years. There will be a diverse range of work on display, including covers and posters."

THE INTERVIEW

Mathew Priest

A Dodgy kind of comeback

WHEN Dodgy hit the big time back in the 90s, the music industry was a very different place. Album and single sales ruled the day, while downloading was unknown.

The trio sold more than a million records worldwide, including three Top 10 hits.

So now they're back, they know they need to find new ways to get their music heard.

Drummer Mathew Priest said: "We didn't want our new album to be overlooked or any cynicism to get in the way. People may say Dodgy are a 90s band – it can just take one cynical music journalist to write you off – but we are very proud of the album and we really wanted people to hear it."

When Dodgy play Whitstable's East Quay in October, fans will be treated to their latest album in the first half. The second part of the show will include the classics.

The band's original line-up of Priest on drums, singer Nigel Clark and guitarist Andy Miller have got together after a break of almost 10 years.

Priest said: "In the mid-90s our world was getting silly. Nigel had a young family and Andy and I didn't. We didn't really understand what that was like when the whole fame thing was kicking off. We stopped communicating and the band broke down. It wasn't really a massive falling out. The pressure just got too much for us all."

But now they are back on tour and promoting their latest album, Stand Upright In A Cool Place. However, they didn't rush into making new music.

Priest said: "Before we recorded a note, we made sure the decks were clear. We didn't want anyone in the studio with any unresolved bitterness. It was a bit like a decorating a wall. They always say the most important work is in the preparation. That is why it did take us a while, but I think Dodgy fans will love it."

The band went to a small recording studio in Malvern to get inspiration and the final album will be released alongside the autumn tour.

The first chance people will get to hear the new songs is live in concert.

Priest said: "There's a bit of a trend of bands just doing one of their old albums in concert.

Ed Hill finds a band who thrived in the 90s are meeting new challenges

FREE PEACE SWEET:

"This is a statement of intent by us. We want to say we are going to do the whole of our new album in its entirety and see how the fans like it. We want to see how they respond to us just doing something creative and new."

Dodgy were always a band with a conscience. They have supported causes such as the Liverpool dockers' strike and War Child, a charity that helps children affected by war. Dodgy were also one of the first bands to entertain fans in Bosnia after the conflict there.

Priest said: "As a musician you can change people's views and affect their lives. It is important when you get involved in something you believe in that you acknowledge it. We don't search for causes, but you get drawn into things.

"The dockers thing happened because when we were recording in Liverpool, Nigel [Clark] saw a picket line and he asked what it was all about. We then all met the men on strike and said OK, let's do a benefit for you.

"The job of a songwriter is to look at the world in a different way. You do need to have an idealistic view of how you want the world to be. That's what we should all do."

During the 10-year break, Clark recorded an acclaimed solo album. He also went on to help children having difficulty at school.

Priest said: "It is amazing what he gets them to do. After throwing chairs at teachers in one session, he gets them to write a song about their emotions and before long they are smiling and cooperative."

Miller formed Hey Gravity, which had success in Europe, and Priest went into music management before deciding to do an MA in broadcast radio. That led to a project for the BBC called People's Songbook.

But for the moment the band are concentrating on their music.

Priest said: "For us, going into the studio means making a whole album as a piece of work. You don't just look at one corner of a Picasso painting. We feel these new songs hang together when we do them live."

Priest also says having a balanced approach to life helps: "What led to the band splitting before was the fact that we did not have other things going on in our lives. It was the band and nothing else, and that got too claustrophobic."

TALKING POINT

Filming in Kent

KENT may be a far cry from the dizzying glamour of Hollywood, but with its ability to attract the very best of the movie industry, it could be in the running to become England's very own version of Tinseltown.

With areas of the county being chosen as location sites for high profile productions including Pirates of the Caribbean, Sherlock Holmes, and The Other Boleyn Girl, bringing in around £14 million in five years to the local economy, Kent County Council has pulled out all the stops to ensure filmmakers keep on coming.

Not only was a dedicated Kent Film Office established in 2006 – an arm of KCC devoted to generating inward investment from the film and broadcast industries into the economy – but last year a new law was passed allowing for temporary road closures to allow filming to take place.

Kent is the only authority in the UK outside of London to have these legal powers.

Just recently, the KCC (filming on highways) Act 2010 allowed for the filming of a high speed car chase along the A299 carriageway between Faversham and Ramsgate for comedy sequel Johnny English: Reborn, starring Rowan Atkinson, which is due for release on October 7.

It is one of a long list of high profile productions to have been shot at locations around the county.

Scenes from 2008 film The Other Boleyn Girl, starring Scarlett Johansson and Natalie Portman, were filmed at Knole, near Sevenoaks, Dover Castle and Penshurst Place.

Chatham's Historic Dockyard was the setting for several blockbuster films, including The Mummy in 1999, starring Brendan Fraser and Rachel Weisz, where the docks were transformed into the Port of Giza in Egypt.

Scenes from Guy Ritchie's 2009 film Sherlock Holmes, with Jude Law and Robert Downey Jnr, were also filmed at the dockyard and last October saw the cast return to film parts of the sequel, which is due for release in December.

Folkestone was used as the setting for Irish director John Crowley's Is Anybody There? starring Michael Cane, with locals used as extras on the film.

The list of films shot in the county, including some of the James Bond movies and other smaller British films, goes on and on.

But what is it that attracts so many filmmakers and directors to Kent?

KCC cabinet member for customer and communities Cllr Mike Hill said the county had a number of locations and buildings which were attractive to those in the film industry.

"Kent has a long history of filming and KCC's Film Office is proud to bring this tradition right up to date, most recently providing locations for a number of major films including Johnny English: Reborn, Pirates of the Caribbean: On Stranger Tides, Harry Potter and The Deathly Hallows Part 1, and Burke and Hare.

"Our extensive location database and range of administrative services provides visiting production companies with a prompt and reliable service to enable them to focus on the business of making great films.

"They are also able to draw on the county's creative sector, employing local crew and actors as well as making use of local services from cornershops to hotels and guest houses."

Award-winning filmmaker Bill Maloney, of Pie and Mash Films, said the mix of cultures and contrasts of the towns made it a popular place for filmmakers.

Mr Maloney, who wrote and directed the acclaimed Lunatic, winner of the best international drama feature at the New York International Film and Video Festival in 2008, said he has spent around 10 years coming back

Big-name stars are an increasingly common sight on the county's streets. Reporter MARIJKE COX discovers how Kent could become the UK's answer Hollywood

KENT'S BIG FUTURE ON THE BIG SCREEN

I find Kent fascinating. There are such different cultures. It's all mixed in together and I find that very interesting. I think Kent is becoming a popular place for film-makers to go and forth to Kent to write and film.

"I used to write a lot down there. One of the reasons I made the film The Blunderers was my ties to Kent. I had a chalet at Seaview between Whitstable and Herne Bay.

"I found the mix very interesting. You had the intellect of Whitstable and the lower class of Herne Bay. One day you could go and see art in Whitstable and the next go to Herne Bay to hear some band that's not really very politically correct.

"It's all mixed in together and I find that very interesting."

Mr Maloney, who is planning to film one of his documentaries in Kent, set his 2007 film The Blunderers at the beachside chalet. The gritty comedy tells the story of a middle-aged alcoholic helping his crack-cocaine addicted friend clean up in the seclusion of the north Kent coast.

During filming he spent time in nearby towns casting from the streets in a bid to create reality in his films.

"I find Kent fascinating. There are such different cultures. I've walked a lot around the county, from Herne Bay right up to Reculver and around Seasalter and Faversham.

"I think Kent is becoming a popular place for filmmakers to go."

In the past, the county has been the setting for hit dramas, including The Darling Buds of May, which was filmed in the scenic village of Pluckley.

Doctor Who actor David Tennant is currently in Margate filming for a major new star-studded series of dramas for the BBC.

He was pictured on the set of Love Life, a new drama written and directed by the award-winning Dominic Savage, who grew up in the town.

Billie Piper and former EastEnders actress Lacey Turner are among the big names filming there. Mr Savage said: "Margate is such a fantastic place to make a film.

"It has such great locations which actually have a real romance about them and possess a unique atmosphere which is very suited to a series of love stories.

"Being my home town it also has a special and personal resonance for me. I'm looking forward to coming back."

KENT REMEMBERED

OFF TO WAR: Thousands of troops set off for war on ships starting out from Folkestone Harbour

Coastal town's women first fanned the white feathers of cowardice

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

EMMY award-winning television show Downton Abbey is now in its second series and the opening programme featured a little known piece of Kentish history.

It showed two of the family servants being presented with white feathers by women – a way of branding them as cowards for not joining up and serving in the trenches of the 1914-18 war.

The drama by Julian Fellowes is fiction – but this really did happen on many occasions.

And it all started on the sea-front at Folkestone where thousands of soldiers each month embarked on troopships from the pier bound for France.

The Road of Remembrance in the town still commemorates their sacrifice, as it leads from the war memorial to the harbour. Plans are also under way to mark the town's part in the conflict with a museum.

But the 'feather girls' are one of the many controversial aspects of the brutal war.

In August, 1914, Admiral Charles Fitzgerald founded the Order of the White Feather to shame what he called "slackers" into joining the forces.

With the support of leading writers such as Mary Ward and Emma Orczy, the organisation encouraged women to give out the feathers, which have their origin as the mark of losers in cock fighting.

A 1902 novel called The Four Feathers about Harry Faversham who resigned his officer commission rather

PRESSURE: White feathers were presented to two men in Downton Abbey's first episode than fight in the Sudan, reinforced the idea.

In the book – twice made into a movie, the later version starring Heath Ledger – fellow officers and his finance taunt him with feathers until he rejoins the Army and reclaims his honour.

About 30 women went out in Folkestone and accosted any man not in uniform saying: "Are you deaf or indifferent to your country's needs?"

They then reminded their victims that British troops were dying just 20 or so miles across the sea before presenting the feathers and saying: "Here's a gift for a brave soldier."

Newspaper reports of the actions meant they spread – but often the targets were not even civilians. Many were troops on leave and out of uniform.

Even fictional air ace Biggles received a feather in a short story, while on a visit to Lympne on leave.

One young woman remembers her father, Robert Smith, being given a feather on his way home from work: "That night he came home and cried his heart out. My father was no coward, but had been reluctant to leave his family. He was 34 and my mother, who had two young children, had been suffering from a serious illness. Soon after this incident my father joined the Army."

The Government became concerned when women began presenting state employees with white feathers.

It was suggested to Home Secretary Reginald McKenna the women should be arrested for "conduct likely to disrupt". McKenna refused but he did arrange for state employees to be issued with badges testifying they were serving "King and Country".

Although a serving soldier, the writer Compton Mackenzie, complained about the Order of the White Feather. He argued that these "idiotic young women" were using white feathers to get rid of boyfriends of whom they were tired.

Pacifist and socialist, Fenner Brockway claimed he received so many white feathers he had enough to make a fan.

And the grandfather of historian Francis Beckett was exempt from service because he had three young daughters. But after receiving a feather he volunteered as a rifleman and died of his wounds in 1918.

Beckett's mother – one of the three daughters – later hit out at "that unknown woman who gave him a white feather and the thousands of brittle, self-righteous women all over the country, who had done the same".

Intrepid mums' retro-food van idea really takes off

THE mobile food van is known mainly for dishing out bacon butties and burgers, but one new business wants to change all that.

Flying Ducks was set up by sisters-in-law Ruth and Susan Tidd. The duo wanted to create an eating experience that harked back to the bygone age of the 40s and 50s.

Susan said: "We got our name from the three Beswick ducks that were popular on the walls of people's homes in the 50s. We dress up in 50s clothing when we go to events and we use old china from the time as well."

The business revolves around its unique caravan converted to offer good food.

Susan, who is based in Bromley, said: "We bought it off eBay from a place near Hever about two years ago. It didn't cost us much, but we have spent a lot converting it into a mobile food van."

The old-style trailer is painted a distinctive duck-egg blue to tie in with the business's name.

Susan said: "We are a fully-independent kitchen on the move. It has a six-burner hob and an LPG urn for teas and coffees and refrigeration. We like to decorate the caravan with bunting during the day. At night we put up fairy lights and underneath there are neon lights."

The main focus of the business is to create new and distinctive food on the move.

Flying Ducks must be doing something right as it was recently short-listed for the British Street Food Awards held at TV presenter and food campaigner Jimmy Doherty's farm in Essex.

People in Kent have the chance to try the food when the van takes part in this weekend's Broadstairs Food Festival, which began on Friday (September 30).

"I have a second home in Broadstairs, so I know the town well," said Susan. "We are really looking forward to the festival. We want to source local suppliers. We like to incorporate other small businesses in what we do."

One of the van's signature dishes is a fish-finger sandwich.

Ed Hill talks to Ruth and Susan Tidd, who have taken inspiration from the 50s for their Flying Ducks business

ON THE GO: Ruth, left, and Susan Tidd bought their caravan on eBay and will be pulling up at this month's Broadstairs Food Festival

Susan said: "We use sustainable fish. We serve it with tomatoes and lettuce, crème fraîche and capers and make our own Tartare sauce and mayonnaise. We also have a 'guilty pleasures' board where you can ditch healthy things and have white bread and ketchup."

With Ruth's years of experience in catering and delicatessens, Flying Ducks is not short of interesting new recipes.

Foodies can also enjoy stumble crumble, which has rhubarb soaked in gin. For the Street Food Awards the van served raging-bull pie – a cottage pie with a bit of a kick.

The van can be hired for big events or small, and it seems the concept is taking off, with bookings increasing all the time.

Susan said: "We recently did the vintage festival on the South Bank. Ruth has been in catering for more than 25 years. My experience is more recent."

"At the moment I still work at a boys' school in Beckenham, but that could change if the business really takes off. In a way we are just a couple of mums being very industrious."

March up to top of the hill for Duke of York's theme nights

RESTAURANT Review

HAVING heard that themed food evenings had been proving popular at the Duke of York inn at Guston, just outside Dover, I knew I had to make a visit – not least because I love my value for money!

With a price of just £7.99 for as much as you can eat plus a drink, I couldn't help but wonder if it was all rather too good to be true.

Thursday night is curry-buffet night at the Duke of York (a Brewers Fayre venue), and that seemed as good a place to start as any, especially to a spice freak like me.

And so it was that I ripped into a mild (unusual for me) and spicy combination of chicken korma with beef Madras, along with a small Goan vegetable curry, which was hotter than I expected.

Accompanied by mango chutney, rice and naan bread, the food was excellent and the service prompt and friendly.

In fact, so good was the food that I was back the following week, on the Monday, to tuck into the Chinese buffet.

I plumped for chicken and mushrooms in oyster sauce, alongside beef in black-bean sauce, with accompanying rice. It was an unusual combination for me but extremely tasty. Suffice to say, I made several return visits to the counter – I simply couldn't get enough of it!

I was on a roll now and, almost before I knew it, was back the next Sunday for the carvery (£11 for three courses, or £9 for a starter and main).

I feasted on superb vegetable soup, turkey and pork with crackling. The vegetables, potatoes and Yorkshire puddings completed the experience.

This is no-frills dining, but it's excellent quality and gives some the chance to experience a range of dishes they may not otherwise order.

Friday is the 'chip shop buffet' – I've yet to try that one, but I will!

The top places to eat, drink and be merry

THERE is no need for the cocktail sausages or slices of flan this year, while the drunken photocopy tricks will certainly be redundant as Kent's finest establishments gear themselves up for the party season.

Warm open fires, good traditional food and plenty of cracklers are the order of the day and Kent's eateries can provide that and a whole lot more.

With under three months until the big day, Christmas-party organisation will be high on the list for many people, whether it be a family gathering, a work do, or even just a romantic meal with a loved one.

From five-course lunches offering turkey, cranberries, locally-sourced vegetables and all the trimmings, to the coastal eatery's catch of the day, Kent has something to suit surely anyone's taste.

WALK

West Farleigh

Visit www.kent.gov.uk/explorekent

THE changing seasons can really inspire you to get out and explore. So why not arm yourself with a camera and discover the wildlife and tranquillity of the River Medway?

West Farleigh hosts one of the river's short circular walks that provides excellent photographic opportunities for those with a keen eye.

An abundance of wildlife can be found along the riverbanks: birds such as kingfisher and barn owl; many insects, including butterflies and dragonflies; and mammals like water voles and even otters, although you would be incredibly fortunate to see the latter.

Starting at Teston Bridge Country Park, the route quickly takes you down to the riverside and continues alongside the bank through grazed grassland towards Kettle Bridge, otherwise known as Barming Bridge.

There has been a crossing here since before Roman times. Then there was a ford on which the Romans laid cobbles.

Apparently, if you dive down to the bottom of the river you can still see the remains of the old cobbles. The fords were replaced with bridges to preserve the crossing points when the level of the water was raised by the introduction of sluices and weirs.

The area is rich in local history – it is said that the houses at the top of the hill played a part in secret smuggling exploits. Residents would signal the all-clear to boats moored so they could unload their booty without being caught.

At West Farleigh Green you have the chance to stop and rest a while; either on the benches if you come prepared with a flask of hot tea, or at The Good Intent pub, which is ideally situated on the route.

As you pass by Church Lane, why not take a short detour through the grounds of All Saints Church and take a closer look at this beautiful building?

Originally built around 1100, the chancel arch, original west door and narrow round-headed windows from this period are deemed to be typically early Norman.

There are many parts that have been added or changed since.

A cross made of bronze, brass and wood was saved by a priest during the Reformation by burying it here. In fact, it was hidden so well that it was not discovered for another 300 years.

The cross now resides in the British Museum. All this history and atmosphere, coupled with the beautiful landscapes and abundance of wildlife, makes this an ideal walk to enjoy at this beautiful time of year.

Art exhibition Teenage times are a changin'

Turner Contemporary, Margate
September to January
www.turnergallery.org

NOTHING In The World But Youth is the latest display at the landmark gallery in Margate. It explores how youth experience has been reflected in art, culture and the media since the late 19th century, when adolescence emerged in cultural consciousness as a distinct phase of life, to now. Inspired by Margate and associated in the collective memory with theme parks, beauty contests and clashes between Mods and Rockers in the 1960s, this exhibition reflects on what it means to be a teenager, both now and in the past.

There are also Late Night Live events at the gallery such as Move, on Friday, October 28, which is a dance-off crossing three generations.

Moscow show Fly high with state circus

Jackson's Recreation Ground, Rochester
October 12-16, 0208 5408122
www.moscowstatecircus.com

THE Moscow State Circus brings its latest and most spectacular show to date to the UK with the sensational extravaganza, Babushkin Sekret. Inspired by the legend of the 12 chairs, the new show takes audiences on an incredible journey of arguably the greatest non-animal circus-performers on Earth. A mammoth cast of Russia's greatest and most talented circus artistes, many of whom have never performed in Britain, transform the most famous circus in the world, combining contemporary and classical circus in ways never before witnessed.

The newly-devised show includes the beautiful queen of Russian circus, Yana Alievia, on a revolving aerial chandelier and the breathtaking Stalkions performing pyramids 30 feet in the air on the legendary high-wire.

There is also the Whirlwind Rubsovm troupe, who catapult themselves across and high into the big top at breakneck speed, as well as the juggling Sherbakovs, the vertical pole balancing of The Alikanov and the high-flying, bouncing bamboo bravados of The Perushkins.

If all this isn't enough to keep you on the edge of your seats, then the clowns Valik and Valerik will have you falling off them with laughter. This is not to be missed.

Myths and monsters Enchantment

Historic Dockyard Chatham
Sat-Mon, October 22-31
www.thedockyard.co.uk
01634 823800

LAST year's Myths & Monsters half-term holiday activities at The Historic Dockyard Chatham were so popular that they will be running again this year from Saturday, October 22, to Monday, October 31. At this time of year, when thoughts of witches and ghosts are all around, the friendly witch Megan has stories of mythical creatures from the deep blue oceans which will enchant, rather than scare, the younger ones.

Children will learn about ghost ships, superstitions linked to the sea and the monsters and mermaids that either frightened or tempted the sailors of long ago. This will be accompanied by craft fun every day from 11.30am to 3.30pm. For a small additional charge, mini junior ghost walks, for children aged eight and above, will run every day at 4pm. There will be a mask-making workshop where children can make and take their own creations, while street art workshops will be available from Monday to Friday, October 24-28, at 11am and 2pm for older children.

Marsh magic Artists look to the church

Romney Marsh
September to October
artinromneymarsh2010@yahoo.co.uk

AS an important link to the events of the Folkestone Triennial, Art In Romney Marsh 2011 will see 19 contemporary artists exhibiting specially-created, site-specific work in five of the area's medieval churches. This year, work will be shown in Ivychurch, Old Romney, Newchurch, Burmarsh and Lydd, by permission of the priest-in-charge, Jim Field. Artists have been encouraged to draw inspiration from the wild, evocative landscape, with its endless skies and scattered herds of longwool sheep, and to respond to the churches themselves, all of which offer stimulating architectural and historical quirks.

The work exhibited includes a wide range of media, including painting, sculpture, installation, film, sound and performance. On selected dates there will be live performances from musicians chosen for their affinity with the aims of the project. To find out more, phone 01424 427896.

www.stagsevenoaks.co.uk

THE Saltmine Theatre Company is delighted to announce that its latest theatre production, The Pilgrim's Progress, to be performed at The Stag Theatre. Set in the Industrial Revolution, Saltmine's adaptation of John Bunyan's classic work promises to bring this extraordinary story to life for a new generation.

The production has already been performed at 16 regional theatres around the UK to great acclaim. Follow the main character Christian and his companions as they set out on a dangerous adventure, a journey that will see him meet both friends and enemies along the way. With challenges great and small on his path, will he ever reach the Heavenly City? First published in 1678, The Pilgrim's Progress is regarded as one of the most significant works of English literature. Bunyan drew on his own spiritual journey to create a story giving comfort to those experiencing struggles in their own lives. The show will be suitable for everyone aged 12 and over. Magic tricks and mirth Combo show

The Horsebridge centre, Whitstable
Friday, October 7, at 8pm
01227 281174

HAVE you heard the one about the accountant who went into showbiz? Ian Keable combines mind-boggling magic and comedy to make an original if not unpredictable show.

This remarkable entertainer will bring his funny tricks and quick wit to The Horsbridge centre in Whitstable for one night only. His aim, he says, is a show where the laughs are as memorable as the magic. And he seems to be getting it right. Keable has recently been voted the British Magical Champion Of Comedy and has also received The Magic Circle Comedy Award. In his show, Funny Tricks, Keable will demonstrate some of the techniques he uses to mystify his audience. The show is aimed at adults and children aged 12 and over and will feature mind-reading, bewildering sleight of hand and, above all, in his own words, his "trademark, laugh-out loud comedy magic". One reviewer described Keable's show as ideal for anyone who enjoys non-stop laughter while simultaneously being totally bamboozled; another simply said it was "mind-boggling". Tickets cost £8, or £6 for concessions, and extracts from some of Keable's previous shows are available at www.magicalcomedian.co.uk/video.html.

A NEW creative company takes up residence at The Brook Theatre in Chatham this month. Sparkle and Dark's Travelling Players focus on creative visual performances, mainly using puppetry, other types of animation and live music. The company produces original shows to tour small-scale venues and festivals, holds workshops for puppet-building and takes puppet commissions. Medway Council's Verne Sanderson said: "It's fantastic to have another talented company taking up residence at the theatre. "The Brook really is a creative factory and is renowned for showcasing high-quality original shows." Sparkle and Dark's first showcase performance, The Girl With No Heart, is on Wednesday, October 5, at 7.45pm. In a world destroyed by war, the children rebuild what they can, one paper brick at a time. The work features puppetry, live music and storytelling. Tickets are priced at £5.

Commuting pays dividends

IT PAYS to have a one-hour commute to London, according to a Halifax study into property and rail prices.

Commuting to London is cheaper than living and working in the city, according to research showing that those who live in Kent pay substantially less for their home.

Residents who travel an hour to work benefit from house prices that are up to 60 per cent, or £375,000, less than those in London, according to the survey.

The research found that paying cheaper accommodation costs substantially offsets the average yearly cost of a train ticket.

According to the survey, property prices about an hour's commute from central London, in cities such as Rochester, were about £245,000.

This was in "significant contrast" to the average property value in central London, which was about £620,000.

In comparison, the average annual rail cost of £4,400 from these areas in the 'one-hour zone' is relatively small.

Other Kent towns within the hour commute include Canterbury, Sittingbourne and Maidstone.

It also found that a 30-minute commute is significantly cheaper. House prices in places such as Sevenoaks were valued on average at £275,000. The average annual rail pass cost is about £3,100.

Because of the high-speed rail link, Ash-

ON TRACK: House prices were up to 60 per cent cheaper an hour's commute from London ford is also now only a few minutes over the half-hour mark.

Nitesh Patel, housing economist at Halifax, said that for many commuters a big factor in living outside of London was about having a better "quality of life".

He said: "Commuters to London tend to get a lot more for their money than in central London [with] bigger houses for lower prices.

"Nonetheless, the decision to commute is not simply a trade-off between financial costs and journey times. Quality of life is also important."

Solicitors issue 'buddy' warning for first home

HOME-BUYERS who 'buddy up' with a friend or relative to afford their first home must factor in all worst-case scenarios before buying, say Thanet solicitors Boys & Maughan.

The business, which earlier this year secured membership to the Law Society's prestigious Conveyancing Quality Scheme (CSQ), which recognises high standards in home-buying, says that failing to plan for all eventualities, even death, could leave you in difficulty.

The head of conveyancing at Boys & Maughan, Peter Rodd, said: "With home loans less accessible than a few years ago, joining up with a friend or relative to buy a home is a good alternative.

"However, there is more to consider when buying this way. There is a high possibility that one party to the joint ownership's circumstances could change, so it is vital to consult your solicitor early on to cater for every possible change in circumstance.

"Circumstances when buying jointly are more likely to change. If you buy with a friend and they subsequently marry or change jobs, they might want to move on and not be tied down by the property they own jointly with you.

"Or if you buy with a family member who doesn't reside there, but who dies and leaves their share to someone else, you may need to factor that into any initial agreement.

"When it is difficult, as now, to raise a deposit and secure a mortgage on your own, buddying up is an excellent way to get a foot on the property ladder, but it needs to be done with legal advice from a CQS-accredited firm."

Hyundai has eyes on prize

By Sam Davison
editorial@archant.co.uk

HYUNDAI will launch an eye-catching yet practical Veloster coupé in November.

The Korean marque – heading what is the world's fifth biggest-selling motor group – already has a stylish new i40 sporting estate on the market and dealers are struggling to cope with demand for its ix35 SUV crossover.

Second-hand prices are rising, too, as the trade and buyers recognise the increasing quality of the cars as well as value, backed by a five-year/unlimited warranty that is rarely called upon.

It all shows how far the Korean motor manufacturer has come in just a few years and it's not hard to gauge the turning point either – the launch of the i30 model in 2007, which we road-tested here.

It was the first of a series of all-new mainstream European-style Hyundais wearing the 'vowel that wowed the world' after success with the prefix to Apple computers' wave of gadgets – the iPod, iMac and iPad.

To be honest, many observers thought Hyundai's marketing a bit cheeky: the i30 was hardly an Apple-style mould-breaker, but it was a giant step for the carmaker with fluid styling, good powertrains and an interior that finally looked good as well as being robust and hard-wearing.

If the i30 didn't match the leaders of the day such as the Ford Focus, Vauxhall Astra and VW Golf, it wasn't exactly asking you to break the bank to buy it and there was a bonus; having chosen to pinch the iPod's prefix for its new line-up, Hyundai wisely ensured that an iPod or equivalent MP3-player really worked in the car – it 'plugged'n'played' straight away when most others didn't without fiddling... or experiencing complete failure.

Since then the car has had a facelift, largely

LITTLE GEM: Hyundai's i30 is more than a match for a number of its more noted rivals and is backed up by the Korean company's five-year/unlimited warranty confined to streamlining the range and tweaking the powertrains, introducing a 'stop and go' ISG economy feature for those who want a model that will quickly shut down and restart the engine in slow-moving traffic.

The powerful 2.0-litre diesel is no more and the 108bhp 1.4-litre petrol remains a favourite for those attracted by the i30's £13,580 entry price and there's a 124bhp petrol unit if you really must have an automatic, but the dominant engine remains the 1.6-litre diesel unit.

It is tested here in its comparatively new 88bhp output form in thrifty yet well-equipped Classic trim (£14,895 as standard or £15,100 with ISG) and it's a car you can buy and forget about, knowing that it has a reputation for reliability, backed by that cast-iron warranty should the gods not be with you.

It is not the liveliest (0-62mph in 14 seconds), but that is balanced by average fuel consumption well over 60mpg and band C road tax – zero in year one and £30 thereafter. The ISG version will save even more, averaging nearer 70mpg and zero/£20 respectively.

The engine rarely betrays that it is diesel – usually when cold or under extreme pressure – but is mostly refined in all modes and being particularly good at fast economical motorway in sixth gear.

Ride comfort is good, though this underlines that the i30 is not really set up for the sharp handling of dearer rivals like the Focus and co.

On the other hand, it is more than a match for a number of noted and, again, more expensive rivals and demonstrates Hyundai's progress in the UK and Euro markets.

For those who want a decent, reliable car at a sensible price, the i30 is also going to be easy to live with due to a sensible well-arranged dashboard, spacious cabin and rear seats that fold flat easily and quickly to swallow big loads.

MOTORING NEWS

Now five-star Mini line-up

IT IS the most unlikely brand extension and a real conversation piece, but BMW Mini has produced a two-seater sports car spin-off from its hatchback original.

The new Coupé, out now, takes the range to five models including the Convertible, Clubman and Countryman. The sawn-off shape with active rear spoiler is priced from £16,640.

A double play from Nissan

NISSAN has revised drivetrains on two key engine options for its Juke supermini crossover.

The 117bhp 1.6-litre petrol and 110bhp 1.5-litre dCi diesel manual have been tweaked to cut emissions and fuel, saving up to £232.47 in fuel over three years – the move does not affect prices (from £13,395) and both now save on road tax by dropping down a band.

Savings with Prius Plug-in TOYOTA has announced a start price of less than £31,000 for its Prius Plug-in Hybrid version, arriving in early 2012.

It should deliver an electric-only (EV) driving range of more than 14 miles, CO2 emissions of 49g/km and a combined fuel consumption of 134.5mpg.

Benefit-in-kind tax rate for company-car-users should also be no more than £52 a month.

Lexus aiming to change premium middle sector

LEXUS has announced a new styling direction for its range with the latest generation GS – the Japanese premium brand's answer to the BMW 5-Series, Audi A6 and Mercedes-Benz E-Class.

Due here early next year, Lexus says the new car will not only change the look of its cars but also herald more emphasis on the driving experience – an area where the Toyota luxury brand is seen to struggle against the best German rivals.

If it can pull it off, though, this GS could be a breakthrough model for Lexus, adding driver satisfaction to the marque's undoubted quality and value – all Lexus models come generously loaded with equipment.

The new GS has a wider stance than the current car and a more spacious interior yet virtually the same dimensions as currently – nobody wins custom in carmaking nowadays by going bigger than before.

UK buyers will be offered two models: the GS 450h full petrol-electric hybrid or GS 250 petrol.

The new range includes more use of aluminium to cut weight and boost nimbleness and ride comfort.

The GS also boasts a sexier grille, which Lexus says will become the new face of the brand and there is even a new paint palette designed to make the various colours shimmer more and complement the car's sleeker lines.

Standard kit includes reversing camera, 10 airbags – including knee airbags for both driver and front passenger – enhanced Bluetooth connectivity for onboard phone use and the usual premium sound/vision system expected of the brand, with a 17-speaker Mark Levinson system also available.

Prices for the new GS are expected to start at about £45,000.

LOOKING THE PART: Lexus hopes its new-look GS will herald more emphasis on the driving experience, an area in which it has struggled

Zafira Tourer poses question

VAUXHALL is about to answer a difficult question but in doing so poses a new one with the imminent launch of the stylish new Zafira Tourer MPV.

The original question was: how does the General Motors brand counter the success of the sporty Ford S-Max, romping ahead in the seven-seat sporty people-carrier segment?

Well, the new Tourer is a stunning riposte and puts the Ford under further pressure with an entry price of £21,000, undercutting the S-Max by £1,200.

But in launching the Tourer, Vauxhall now poses a question mark over the standard Zafira, launched in 2005 and now in its twilight years.

Vauxhall insists that the Tourer is not a replacement and that both models will be sold alongside one another – at least for now.

However, they are similar in what they do, promoting speculation that when the current Zafira gets the chop the name will transfer to a new chunky crossover replacement like the Nissan Qashqai, also neatly avoiding the need for Vauxhall's conspicuously unsuccessful and over-priced Antara SUV.

Back with the Zafira Tourer, we find that, despite aggressive pricing against the S-Max, the ES 1.8 140PS (138bhp) entry model comes with decent kit including air-con, digital radio and MP3/Aux connectivity, cruise control, six airbags, a seven-speaker sound system, active headrests and Vauxhall's Flex7 seating – all five rear seats fold flat to the floor.

The svelte design is another from the blueprint created by Vauxhall/Opel's British design guru Mark Adams, the man behind the European Car Of The Year-winning Insignia and the latest Astra, which came close to that coveted award.

But if the Tourer does its Ford rival for style, it must walk the talk on the driving front. Vauxhall insists it will with a new chassis and wide track, delivering good driving dynamics as well as ride comfort.

CRICKET

As key trio quit, Willis defends Farbrace record

By David Pritchard

david.pritchard@archant.co.uk

PAUL Farbrace's record as Kent's director of cricket has been defended by Simon Willis, the club's high performance director.

Farbrace left the club on Tuesday with 12 months still to run on his three year contract with the county. It was part of an unsettling day for supporters, with Joe Denly and Martin van Jaarsveld moving on to Middlesex and Leicestershire respectively.

Under Farbrace's leadership results have been underwhelming, with the team following up last season's relegation from Division One of the LV= County Championship by finishing second bottom this summer.

But given the context of tightening budgets as a consequence of Kent's grim financial results over the last two years, Willis feels Farbrace's tenure should not be viewed harshly.

"He's given youngsters opportunities and deep down all he wanted was for the club and the individuals to be successful," he said.

"He's had a bit of bad luck along the way with injuries and ultimately the team finishing second bottom of the championship wasn't ideal. He's given everything to the role, tried hard and who's to say if another person could have done any better? It was a challenging time for everybody at the club."

Willis, who is likely to become linked to the vacant post, was also sorry to see the departure of Denly and van Jaars-veld, who will leave a hole in Kent's batting line-up.

"Jarra has given 110 per cent to the club on the field during his time with us and has won many games, so clearly he is a big one to lose. Joe's just started to develop into that sort of cricketer and at 25 is coming into his peak years.

"From those points of view you're disappointed but you totally understand, everyone has career decisions to make."

Denly was in the first intake of the club's academy in 2003, going on to score more than 4,500 first class runs. The opener from Whitstable was sad to leave but felt Middlesex provided a better chance of returning to the England set-up.

"I'm committed to becoming the best player I can possibly be and firmly believe that the environment at Middlesex will help me achieve that and one day resurrect my prospects at international level," he said.

Van Jaarsveld hit more than 8,000 first class runs in seven seasons, becoming arguably Kent's most important player, but asked to be released from the final year of his deal, saying he needed a "new challenge".

SOUTH AFRICA
LINE UP VISIT

KENT will host South Africa next July as part of the tourists' build-up to a Test series with England.

The Proteas, ranked second to Andrew Strauss' men in the Test world rankings, will visit Canterbury.

The three-day game, which will begin on Friday, July 13, will be South Africa's final warm-up game before taking on England.

Jamie Clifford, Kent's chief executive, said: "As their final fixture prior to the start of the Test series it promises to be a big occasion. A three-day game against one of the top sides in world cricket, in mid-July at the St Lawrence Ground – what could be better?"

It is likely to see the club reap a financial boost from the game, which should attract big crowds. Last month the St Lawrence Ground hosted India in a day/night game.

Olympics in sight after Overall marathon effort

A TERRIFIC marathon debut has put Scott Overall in the frame to represent Great Britain at the London Olympics next summer.

The Blackheath & Bromley Harriers athlete decided to step up from shorter distances after clocking lacklustre times on the track in May.

Overall, 28, made a dream start to his marathon career, finishing fifth in Berlin last Sunday with a time of 2:10.55, more than a minute inside the Olympic qualification standard.

He said: "Officially I'm not in the team yet but I'd like to think I will be when the first round of selections are made in December. I knew I was in shape but I was surprised with the time."

GOLF

Solheim joy tinged with frustration for Stupples

KAREN Stupples helped Europe to a memorable Solheim Cup victory last weekend but was denied a role on the final day's play due to an injury to her opponent.

The golfer from Deal was scheduled to play Cristie Kerr in the potentially pivotal final singles match, but the American pulled out with a wrist problem before the start, conceding the point.

Stupples, who lost her other two matches in Ireland, said: "I was ready to play and, if she hadn't been injured, I know she would have given it a good crack, too. I'm gutted, really, but that's how it is."

Europe won the trophy 15-13.

Touring Car battle set for Brands Hatch as Jackson clings to faint title chances

BRANDS Hatch will provide the backdrop as an enthralling battle for the British Touring Car Championship (BTCC) title continues this weekend.

With just one more round to come after Sunday's three races on the 2.3-mile Grand Prix circuit it looks like being a three-way shoot-out for glory. Honda team-mates Gordon Shedden and Matt Neal head into the weekend level on points at the top, with defending champion Jason Plato still in contention 24 points behind.

As usual a bumper crowd is expected for the ever-popular series. Fans will have plenty of local interest, with Wrotham-based Airwaves Racing likely to figure prominently.

A dreadful sequence of results at the last two rounds have seen Mat Jackson's hopes for the overall title all but ended, although the independents' crown is still within reach.

The 30-year-old, who trails the leaders by 45 points, claimed two podium finishes and a fourth place in the season opener at Brands in April. He insists as long as the title remains a mathematical possibility there is hope.

"After two shocking weekends we now have nothing to lose so we have to go to Brands with one thing in mind; winning," he said.

"As far as titles are concerned, it sounds bad but the independent championship has never really featured on my radar. It's the overall championship that the team and I want and we have to keep fighting until the death and hope that the others' luck changes and, if the independent title comes home, then it's a bonus."

Dartford's Tony Gilham will also be on the grid. The 32-year-old has received an upgrade since the last round at Rockingham and is hoping to drive with a new turbo charged engine, a first for a BMW in the BTCC.

Gilham, driving for Geoff Steel Racing, was only due to decide on Friday whether it would be used this weekend.

He said: "If we arrive on track with the same looking car as last time around, you'll know it hasn't quite gone to plan."

Kedwell revels in new partnership as brace makes happy viewing

By David Pritchard

david.pritchard@archant.co.uk

LEAGUE Two highlights are back on the viewing agenda in Danny Kedwell's house after the Gillingham striker ended his wait for a goal from open play last weekend.

A brace in the 3-1 win against Burton Albion at Priestfield doubled his tally for the season. The 28-year-old's previous goals had come from the penalty spot and his lack of success from open play was beginning to frustrate the summer signing from AFC Wimbledon.

With the pressure relieved last Saturday, Kedwell was free to watch the highlights, which he had been avoiding during a barren spell in front of goal.

But rather than just a vain way to relive his glories, the striker saves the clips to use as a motivational tool.

"When I score I always record it and watch it a lot," he said.

"It's good because when you go through a spell when you're not scoring you can watch it back and feel the buzz I was getting at that time. It can give you a bit of help. I've always done it.

"All forwards go through bad patches. Through my career I've never gone through a bad patch at the beginning of the season like I've done here - I've always started well. It's good to watch those memories back and it just seems to give me that feeling again."

Kedwell is now a fifth of the way to the 20 goals he targeted for his first season with Gillingham and believes a change in formation will get the best out of him. An injury to strike partner Adam Birchall meant the target man started the season playing on his own up front.

While more than happy to fulfil the role for the good of the team, he feels supporters will see what he is capable of now Frank Nouble has arrived on loan, allowing Gills boss Andy Hessenthaler to play the strikers in tandem.

Kedwell said: "Now Frank's come in it's given me a bit of help and lets me show what I'm about. When I was playing on my own up front it was a bit difficult, I couldn't do what I'm good at, I had to do something for the team.

"As soon as Frank came in we just clicked, it was weird. As soon as went on to the training ground before the Hereford game we worked together really well. He scored the next day [in a 6-1 win] and then we both scored last week, so hopefully it carries on."

Kedwell also cleared up the celebration to his first goal against Burton, where he put a finger to his lips and appeared to shush the home fans in the Rainham End.

Picture: ADY KERRY

CRITICS: Danny Kedwell hushes his friends

He said: "That was for my mates. We all went together when I was a kid and grew up watching Gillingham. They've been giving me grief for weeks, saying 'any chance of scoring from open play?'. I knew they were in the corner and that's why I went over."

FOOTBALL

Forster has high hopes for Dover Athletic after another draw prompts Whites' board to sack disappointed Hayes

THE ambition of Dover Athletic was key to convincing Nicky Forster it was the right club to further his managerial career.

An eventful 48 hours at Crabble saw Martin Hayes sacked on Monday in the wake of a poor run which had seen the Whites slip to 12th in the Conference South table, with Forster agreeing a one-year contract on Tuesday.

The 38-year-old, whose long playing career included spells at Gillingham, Brighton and Reading, had been looking for a new post after a spell in charge as caretaker boss at Brentford last season and is relishing the chance to get his teeth into a first permanent role.

He said: "I was looking for the right job that matched my ambitions. I went for a couple of jobs and turned them down so it's nice to get something I'm energised about.

"Dover are a fantastic club with a really good foundation. The chairman has worked hard over the past few years to turn it round off the field. They're geared towards certainly the Conference [Premier] and the infrastructure is there to go beyond it."

The move ended Hayes' 15-month spell with the Whites. The highlight was a thrilling FA Cup run which saw Gillingham and Aldershot Town beaten on the way to a third round tie at Huddersfield Town, but the league form was always the priority. After narrowly missing out on the play-offs last season, a run of just one win from eight games was critical and a 1-1 draw at home to Havant & Waterlooville last weekend provided the breaking point.

Hayes, who had been subjected to increasing criticism from the terraces, felt the negativity had begun to affect the players.

He said: "We had a few 0-0 draws which generate a lot of frustration. I was fully aware over the last two games the pressure was there to get some results but I was still confident and up until [last] Saturday I thought we were playing quite well. Supporters have an impact on what goes on and I think the players started to show the first signs of the pressure and maybe the stuff aimed at me started to affect them."

NON-LEAGUE FOOTBALL FOCUS

WITH FRED ATKINS

'Silent majority' must speak out

“IF Jim Parmenter didn't already know that being the chairman of a football club is an almost impossible job, he will do by now.

Parmenter felt compelled to defend his record as Dover's chairman last week, bemoaning the vitriolic abuse being showered on his team from a "vocal minority", only to give them precisely what they wanted on Monday by firing Martin Hayes.

The merits of that decision won't be known until the end of this season or perhaps beyond, but some of the reaction to the dismissal left a sour taste in the mouth.

In common with around 99.9 per cent of people who go into professional football, Hayes' career probably hasn't followed the trajectory he hoped it would.

As a striker he broke into the Arsenal first team aged 19, and was a key player in the side that won the 1987 League Cup final. Yet although he was on the field at Anfield in 1989, when Michael Thomas' last-minute goal won the Gunners the title, by that stage he was a fringe player who spent the next decade sliding down the leagues.

When the latest disappointment arrived Hayes himself reacted with his usual dignity, while Parmenter had the class to say: "It's a sad day to tell an honest and decent fellow he's out of a job."

There was ill-disguised glee at the news, with anonymous keyboard warriors posting messages that conveyed both puerile unpleasantness and a genuine sense of entitlement.

In one sense this is Parmenter's fault. When he took over at Crabble, the club were finding new leagues to get relegated into and £400,000 in debt.

The Whites are now solvent and playing in Conference South, but even if Dover do achieve promotion this year, he'll still have to perform an encore. And will the new manager get a season's grace before another "vocal minority" start calling for his head after a few bad results?

In the lower divisions you can go a long way with the money generated by a regular fan base of around 800, but the ease with which Andy Hessenthaler achieved successive promotions has made a rod for his successors' backs.

This can happen at any club.

On the same day that Hayes was being sacked, Maidstone were finally beginning work on their new stadium, 11 years after plans were first published. For this act alone the new owners ought to be given the freedom of the borough, but it isn't difficult to imagine a scenario in five years time when a chant of "sack the board" goes up from the uninitiated if the club fails to achieve some imagined target.

Before sacking Hayes, Parmenter spoke of the more balanced approach taken by a "silent majority" of fans at Crabble.

That, however, is the problem with silent majorities: they tend to stay silent.
